U.S. airlifts Hondurans to fighting at border

Nicaragua says warplanes hit villages

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. helicopters, with President Reagan's approval, on Sunday began airlifting Honduran troops to within 25 miles of a battle with about 1,000 Nicaraguan troops that have crossed into Honduras, a State Department spokesman said.

No Americans were involved in the fighting, and they were under orders to remain at least 25 miles away, in keeping with congressional restrictions on the use of U.S. forces along the border dividing Honduras, a U.S. ally, from Nicaragua, governed by the leftist Sandinistas, said the spokesman, Gregory Lagana.

A statement released late Sunday by the State Department said Reagan night, "after consulting with his senior advisers, agreed (Saturday night) to provide the requested airlift support using U.S. military helicopters currently located at Honduras' Palmerola air base, near Comayagua."

The airlift began Sunday afternoon and is expected to conclude sometime Monday, the statement said. "U.S. helicopters will not be armed and will not approach areas of hostile action," the statement said.

In Nicaragua Sunday, Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto denied that any Nicaraguana troops were in Honduras and claimed instead that U.S. warplanes bombed two Nicaraguan villages Sunday afternoon, wounding eight people.

"Today Nicaragua has been the object of a series of air bombardments in the northern zone of the country," D'Escoto said during a news conference in Managua. "Everything indicates that the planes that have penetrated our territory and bombed different populations are North American planes."

However, Dan Howard, a White House spokesman, discounted D'Escoto's assertion, saying, "It's not for me to say what's happening. It's for the government in Honduras to say."

The Honduran government has claimed a Nicaraguan incursion.

Michael O'Brien, a U.S. Embassy spokesman in Tegicugalpa, Honduras, went further in denying D'Escoto's charge, calling it "completely false."

"This is obviously another example of Sandinista disinformation. It's a maneuver by the Nicaraguan regime to distract public attention from the Sandinista aggression against Honduras," O'Brien said. He added that "no U.S. military plane is operating on the border with Nicaragua."

Reports of the fighting could not be independently verified because the Honduran government has barred reporters from the area.

Lagana said "there had been a series of harassing actions last week, patrols moving across the border. Then on Thursday, 200 Sandinista troops overran a Honduran position manned by 16 to 20 Honduran soldiers."

The attack came in an area not far from positions occupied by U.S.-backed Contra rebels, Lagana said, "but we have no doubt that the Sandinistas knew they were attacking Honduran positions."

The statement said the Honduran government formally protested the Nicaraguan attack Friday, but "the protest was rejected by the Sandinistas."

U.S. knew Iran paid for Beirut bombing

Officials decline comment on story

By the Associated Press

MIAMI — The White House had precise evidence three years ago that Iran ordered and paid for terrorist bombings that killed 258 U.S. servicemen and diplomats in Beirut in 1983, The Miami Herald reported Sunday.

The Herald said its story was based on U.S. intelligence reports it had obtained and was confirmed by a White House official.

A White House spokesman, Dan Howard, said in Washington on Sunday that he had no information about or comment on the report.

The National Security Agency secretly intercepted diplomatic messages in 1983 that enabled the United States to follow the movement of more than $1 million from the government of Iran to the Iranian Embassy in Lebanon, according to the story.

The money was earmarked for the bombings of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut and the Marine compound at Beirut International Airport, according to the intelligence report, prepared after the 1983 attacks.

"Looking at it (the intercepted messages) after the fact, it was a clear indication the money was going for the attack," an unidentified official familiar with reports based on the intercepts told The Herald. "There was no doubt in our minds."

"Obviously, the NSA knew about this, and I would have to surmise the president knew about it, too," the White House official said.

Why the NSA did not use the intercepted messages to warn the American diplomats and Marines about the attacks was not clear. But one official said there were often delays in analyzing intercepted information.

"There is so much stuff coming in all the time that it is not translated and analyzed on a real-time basis," the unidentified official told The Herald. "There is stuff on the tapes that isn't analyzed until months

Reagan urged to release details on Iran quickly

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Lawmakers from both parties Sunday welcomed President Reagan's concession that mistakes were made in carrying out his policy of arms sales to Iran, but they urged him to move further and faster in disclosing details of the transactions.

"The right strategy is, No. 1, to come up front," said Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C. "The president is moving in that direction. He said yesterday that he thought some mistakes had been made. That's quite a concession."

Other prominent Democratic lawmakers, as well as members of the president's own party, echoed the sentiments voiced by Hollings, who has been one of Reagan's harshest critics in the weeks since the series of transactions, including up to $30 million in clandestine payments to Nicaraguan rebels, began to come to light.

Reagan, in his weekly radio address Saturday, said that "while we're still seeking all the facts, it is obvious that the execution of these policies was flawed and mistakes were made."

However, he did not specify who made the mistakes, what they were, or when they were made. Other questions are when Reagan approved the shipment of arms to Iran, what weapons were sent and what his intentions were.

Hollings, a member of the Senate intelligence committee, which is investigating the matter, said on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley," that 12 arms shipments were made to Iran, totalling 5,000 tons.

That would be higher than administration estimates. Reagan said last month that the contents of the shipments could have fit into one cargo plane.

More information may come to light this week as the Senate intelligence committee continues its investigation and other panels begin their own. Secretary of State George Shultz is scheduled to testify Monday before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and Tuesday the House intelligence committee opens hearings. Also, the Senate and the House are prepared to form special committees next year.

Despite the lingering questions and the continuing investigation, the mood in the capital has changed from a week before.

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole, who last week urged Reagan to summon a special session of Congress to appoint a Watergate-style investigating committee, called the president's speech "a big step in the right direction" and predicted "a turn-around" in the political

President seeks to repair credibility

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER

Analysis

WASHINGTON — The assertion by President Reagan that "mistakes were made" involving his secret Iranian arms deal has been weeks in coming and marks a new effort on the part of the chief executive to repair his damaged credibility with Congress and the American people.

The president's critics — and even his closest Republican allies on Capitol Hill — had insisted such an admission was necessary.

Only last Tuesday, Senate GOP leader Bob Dole, asked whether Reagan was willing to admit that a mistake was made, replied, "I'm not certain the president's quite prepared to do that yet."

But things got worse for Reagan as the week went on and the Senate intelligence committee's closed-door hearings continued. Sources said former national security advisor Robert McFarlane's testimony disputed administration claims about when Reagan first knew of the arms sales. And more revelations were possible with the House Foreign Affairs Committee opening hearings Monday and the House intelligence committee beginning its own hearings Tuesday.

But few things are clear in this unusual series of events — and one of them is whether the president's statement will help stem the tide of criticism he and his staff have endured, or halt the questions about what he knew of the transfer of funds to Nicaraguan rebels.

In his Saturday radio address, Reagan did not speak directly about the funneling of payments from the Iranian arms sales to the Contras, a stunning revelation that caused the resignation of his national security adviser and the firing of a National Security Council aide and ignited congressional investigations.

Reagan said: "While we're still seeking all the facts, it's obvious that the execution of these policies was flawed and mistakes were made." He did not say his policy of renewing ties with Iran was in error, but he did not renew his defense.

The president used his weekly radio address — delivered from his rustic weekend retreat in Camp

Report: Cancer death rate decreases

By WARREN E. LEARY
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The death rate from cancer is decreasing for Americans under age 55 despite a slow increase in the incidence of the disease in this age group, reports the National Cancer Institute.

The agency, in its annual statistics review to be issued Monday, attributes much of the 7 percent decline in the death rate for the group from 1975 to 1984 to advances in cancer treatment.

Dr. Vincent T. DeVita, director of the institute, said the death rate drop from 38.2 per 100,000 population to 35.7 per 100,000 is evident for every age group under 55. About 24 percent of all newly diagnosed cancers occur in these age groups.

DeVita, who was to present the report at a meeting of the National Cancer Advisory Board in New York City, said in a statement that another measure of treatment success is survival rates, which also are going up.

"People under 55 have a higher overall five-year relative survival rate for cancer than older patients, indicating that we're being particularly successful in treating these patients," he said.

The relative five-year survival rate — the percentage of patients surviving five years after their cancer is diagnosed — for those under age 55 is 59 percent. This includes patients of all races and both sexes diagnosed with all types of cancer between 1974 and 1983.

The institute said the latest data on cancer incidence and deaths are now available through

France faces crisis over student protests

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
The Associated Press

PARIS — Student protests against a university reform bill widened into a general challenge of the conservative government Sunday as union leaders joined students in calling for nationwide demonstrations this week.

Dozens of people clashed with about 500 police in the Latin Quarter student district. At least 68 people, including 58 police, were injured, and 28 people were arrested. Student leaders denounced the violence.

Premier Jacques Chirac, faced with one of the greatest political crises of his nine months in office, appealed for calm. His interior minister, Charles Pasqua, promised a full investigation into the death Saturday of a 22-year-old student following what witnesses said was a beating by police.

Protests against the reform bill began three weeks ago but escalated in the last few days. The government says the measure would make universities more competitive, but students charge that it would make higher education elitist.

The students' national coordinating committee called for national demonstrations this Wednesday and invited unions and other organizations to 1984, and survival statistics are available through 1983.

The cancer incidence rate for the entire population, which has been increasing about 0.7 percent annually, was 351.8 per 100,000 in 1984. The death rate, also on the rise an average of 0.5 percent yearly, was 170.7 per 100,000 in the same year.

The report said the five-year survival rate for the entire population, regardless of age and other factors, was almost 49 percent.

For whites diagnosed between 1977 and 1983, the survival rate was 49.8 percent. For blacks, the figure was only 37.6 percent, which some experts attribute to later diagnosis of the disease, lack of access to health care and not as good a response to cancer treatment.

The report noted that new data on breast cancer indicate that between 1983 and 1984, the death rate for white women under age 50 actually increased from 5.9 to 6.3 per 100,000.

The reason for the increase is unknown and it may be a random statistical fluctation, the report said. Until now, this rate had been decreasing an average of 1 percent annually in the past decade.

For white women over age 50, the breast cancer incidence rate in 1984 was 296 per 100,000 and the death rate was 91.9. For black women of the same age, incidence was lower, 226.4 per 100,000, but the death rate was higher at 92.7. Black women under 50 had an incidence rate of 31.7 per 100,000 and a death rate of 9.3.

Like the declining death rate in the under 55 group, Devita said another positive note in the statistics concerns colon cancer.

"Colon cancer death rates for all ages combined are also decreasing in spite of an increasing incidence rate, reflecting in part advances in cancer treatment and in part earlier detection," he said.

The five-year survival rate for colon cancer increased from 49.5 percent for those diagnosed between 1974 and 1976 to 52.6 percent for patients seen between 1977 and 1983.

The colon cancer death rate has been dropping about 0.6 percent annually and was 21 per 100,000 in 1984. Incidence rates for the cancer have been rising about 0.5 percent yearly, and it was 50.3 per 100,000 in 1984.

A decrease in lung cancer incidence among white men, first reported last year, continues, the report said, and a similar trend may be emerging among white women, particularly those under age 45.

This decline, consistent with smoking patterns among these groups, is seen in the occurrence of new lung cancer cases among white women remaining about the same in 1984 as the year before, 33.7 cases per 100,000. This contrasts with a pattern of average annual increases of 5 percent in previous years.

join in opposing the reform bill and police "repression."

The Communist-led General Confederation of Labor, France's largest union federation, urged its membership Sunday to join "in powerful day of strikes on Wednesday, Dec. 10, and to participate en masse in the demonstrations."

Other groups were expected to join as well.

In the Latin Quarter, dozens of people threw stones and bottles at police, burned barricades, broke windows and set cars afire, police said.

After four hours, about 500 police officers surrounded the area and moved in on the rioters, witnesses said.

Police said 58 officers were hurt, with five of them hospitalized. Hospital officials reported 10 rioters injured.

Police said 20 cars were burned and 21 windows broken.

The student committee denounced the violence, saying their movement was being "stained by these acts."

It said the vandalism was "perpetrated by groups having nothing to do with the student movement."

At a congress of his Rally for the Republic party Sunday, Chirac appealed for calm, but said the government "will accept neither disorder nor attempts at destabilization waged by minorities." "We are looking for balanced solutions with those who have something to say and not with irresponsible people for whom the primary character of their arguments is contrary to discussion," he said.

Pasqua told the congress that an investigation would reveal the details of the death Saturday of Malik Oussekine.

An autopsy showed he was beaten, but found the cause of death was a heart attack stemming from kidney problems. Witnesses said Oussekine was clubbed and kicked by three officers after he ran into an apartment building for safety. It was not known whether he was a demonstrator or a passer-by.

Honduras

The following day, the Honduran armed forces "verified the presence in Honduras of a Sandinista force estimated to number over 1,000 troops and confirmed continuing Sandinista attacks against Honduran military outposts well within Honduras," the statement said.

Late Saturday afternoon, "the Honduran armed forces launched air strikes against Sandinista targets within Honduras, the statement said, and the government of Honduras requested U.S. airlift assistance."

U.S. UH-1H Huey and CH-47 Chinook helicopters based at the Palmerola air base in Honduras were being used to ferry Honduran forces toward the battle, with the Hueys handling the troops and the Chinooks artillery and other equipment, he said.

"No fixed winged aircraft are taking part," Lagana said.

Incursions by Sandinista forces chasing the Contras into Honduras are frequent, according to U.S. government reports, but the Honduran armed forces ordinarily stay out of the fighting.

"Their hands were forced this time," said a Pentagon source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

One administration source speculated that the Nicaraguans crossed the border "to turn up the heat on the Hondurans, to let them know that there is a price to be paid" for close association with the United States.

U.S. officials said they would not provide further details on how many U.S. forces or helicopters were involved in the airlift until "that information would no longer be of military value to the Sandinistas."

The latest border-crossing was the fifth by the Sandinistas reported in seven months.

Last March, the U.S. helicopters ferried Honduran troops toward the border to thwart an incursion by 1,500 Nicaraguan troops. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said at the time that no U.S. troops stationed in Honduras were involved in the fighting.

The United States provided Honduras with $20 million in emergency aid to Honduras to help fight the March crossing.

At the time, the United States also used 12 UH-1H Huey and 6 CH-47 Chinook multipurpose helicopters to ferry Honduran troops to the embattled area. Those helicopters also were based at Palmerola, 100 miles from the Nicaraguan border in west-central Honduras.

Pentagon spokesman Col. Arnold Williams said he was unable to say immediately how many U.S. troops are in Honduras. Last March, 2,900 were there, and the number rose to 4,600 last May.

"It goes up and down," Williams said.

Several hundred American troops are stationed at Palmerola as part of Operation Bravo, a joint command exercise, and several hundred more are in the countryside taking part in Operation Blazing Trails, an engineering exercise designed to build roads.

The U.S. armed forces regularly stage exercises in Honduras, and some of them involve reserve units from the National Guard.

Dole, appearing on CBS' "Face the Nation," cited unidentified sources on the Senate intelligence committee as saying that panel's probe "may have a dry hole there." The panel, he said, "may have gone about as far as they are going to go. And maybe this isn't such a big, big thing."

However, Dole's predecessor as Senate GOP leader, former Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee, said discrepancies in statements by administration officials suggested the president still was not getting the full story from his aides.

Reagan, Baker said, "simply must get the facts out and do it promptly and be ahead of the committee and ahead of the special prosecutor."

House Republican leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., also urged further steps by the president, saying, "it is up to him at this particular juncture to say, 'Yes, I made mistakes. And (my aides) have made mistakes."

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., a confidant of Reagan, advised the president to "marshall all the forces in the federal government, the FBI and everything else, and get ahead of the information.

"You shouldn't sit idly by in the weeks and months ahead on a Chinese water treatment basis and have these disclosures," said Laxalt, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press."

House Majority leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, slated to become House Speaker when Congress convenes on Jan. 6, also urged Reagan to press administration officials to divulge the facts.

"I think that if the president sincerely wants to to help, he would insist that his aides be forthcoming with the Congress," said Wright.

Two ousted White House aides said to have known about the transactions, former national security adviser Vice Adm. John Poindexter and his deputy, Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, appeared before the Senate intelligence committee last week, but declined to testify, pleading the Fifth Admendment against self-incrimination.

David — to communicate his message because, he said, it was an informal way for him to address the American people "from the heart." The White House went so far as to release a new picture of the president delivering his radio address, a rare event.

Some administration officials, speaking privately, noted that the president's remarks were long in coming and were directed at restoring his credibility, given his drop in the opinion polls.

"It's a change in tone," acknowledged one official. "It does go further than ever before. ... I'm glad he finally got it over with."

The official, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, noted that the president has attempted to restore the trust of the American people by calling for an independent counsel and congressional investigations.

Reagan read Vice President George Bush's speech of last week, in which he said that "mistakes were made," and agreed with him, the official said.

"Bush led the way," the official said, explaining Reagan's shift.

Reagan's conciliatory comments amounted to a startling change of tone for Reagan, who had attempted since the early November disclosures about the Iranian arms connection, to ride out the wave of controversy with a tough-it-out attitude.

In his Nov. 13 televised speech, in which Reagan first revealed the secret dealing with Iran, the president staunchly defended his policy and said accusations that arms had been swapped for hostages were "utterly false."

At his Nov. 19 news conference, Reagan reacted sharply to a reporter's suggestion that he admit that an error was made "so that you can get on with the next two years."

The president replied, "Because I don't think that a mistake was made. It was a high-risk gamble and it was a gamble that, as I have said, I believe the circumstances warranted, and I don't see that it has been a fiasco or a great failure of any kind."

Only several days later — on Nov. 25 when the diversion of funds was revealed and Reagan announced the resignation of his national security adviser and the firing of a National Security Council aide — Reagan said that when the first information reached him, it "convinced me that in one aspect, implementation of that policy was seriously flawed."

Yet in an interview with Time magazine published a week ago, Reagan's harsh commentary returned, saying there was "bitter bile in my throat these days. I've never seen the sharks circling like they are now with blood in the water."

"What's driving me up the wall is that this wasn't a failure until the press got a tip from that rag in Beirut and began to play it up," Reagan said.

"I do not think it was a mistake," Reagan said at another point in the interview, adding, "I'm not going to back off, I'm not going to crawl into a hole. I'm going to go forward."

Despite the fact that Reagan was asked repeatedly to admit that a mistake had been made, it was clear the president was uncomfortable with using the word and showed how stubborn he could be when pressured.

But the president has often confounded his critics or those who are frustrated by his refusal to give in when faced by defeat. Whether it has been pressing aid to the Contras from a reluctant Congress or making tax reform a reality, the president has shown he can be more flexible when it suits him — opening the way to compromise, and even claiming victory for himself.

Still, some say the president has farther to go.

Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., the top Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called Reagan's statement a step in the right direction, but added that "before this matter comes to a conclusion in my view, there's going to have to be an agreement that a mistake in policy was made."

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., a confidant of Reagan, urged the president to "marshall all the forces in the federal government, the FBI and everything else, and get ahead of the information."

Laxalt, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press" Sunday, advised the president: "You shouldn't sit idly by in the weeks and months ahead on a Chinese water treatment basis and have these disclosures."

Ignoring advice from secretary of state a time-honored presidential tradition

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When President Reagan rejected George P. Shultz's warning against selling arms to Iran he was following a time-honored presidential tradition: ignoring advice from secretaries of state — even those highly esteemed at the White House.

But amid the furor over the arms sales and evidence from opinion polls that most people think Shultz was right, Reagan may take solace in knowing that in disregarding a secretary of state, he's in company with George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Franklin D. Roosevelt.

As recently as Reagan's first term, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, Jr. spent 18 stormy months fighting to be the "vicar" of U.S. foreign policy. After he lost the battle and resigned, Haig wrote a bitter memoir accusing the White House staff of undermining him.

Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson resigned from President Washington's Cabinet in 1793 when he grew weary of Washington taking the advice of pro-British colleagues.

Seven decades later, Lincoln continuously reversed Secretary of State William H. Seward. As presidency expert Louis W. Koenig chronicled in his 1964 classic, "The Chief Executive," Seward once offered to relieve Lincoln of the arduous task of formulating policies. Lincoln wrote back, in effect, "Don't bother."

Woodrow Wilson, Roosevelt and Richard M. Nixon used trusted personal aides for the big missions and their secretaries of state often found out afterward what was going on.

Jimmy Carter overruled Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance's advice against trying to rescue U.S. hostages in Iran. Vance resigned after the attempt ended in disaster.

In the current case, Reagan apparently overruled Shultz's advice last winter and organized a White House-run initiative that included selling arms to Iran at a time when the administration was publicly trumpeting its view that that country was a nest of terrorists. By all accounts, the State Department took no active part in the policy, but it is not yet clear how much individual officials knew.

Clark Clifford, who ran the Pentagon briefly for Lyndon Johnson and was a White House counsel under Harry Truman, said he found the relationship between Reagan and Shultz on this issue "an abomination."

"I don't see how a secretary of state can put up with having such an important and dangerous disagreement go on," Clifford said in an interview with The Associated Press. "This type of thing has gone on throughout history, but I don't think it's right."

At the same time, Clifford acknowledged that when he was defense secretary and seeking an early end to the Vietnam War, he discovered that Johnson was giving orders directly to field commanders and circumventing the civilian hierarchy at the Pentagon.

"I knew about it, but I didn't say anything about it," Clifford said.

Why do presidents sometimes ignore the advice of men they have personally selected as the titular head of the U.S. foreign policy establishment?

In recent years, presidents have believed that the State Department's balooning bureaucracy is too cumbersome for action or adequate decision-making. Carter, as well as Nixon in his first term, relied predominantly on their personal national security advisers to make decisions.

Roosevelt had the State Department handle routine matters and let his close friend Harry Hopkins carry out many of the important negotiations before and during World War II.

Some secretaries, appointed for purely political reasons, were cut out of policy-making from the first day.

William Jennings Bryan under Wilson and James G. Blaine under Benjamin Harrison were former presidential contenders who both resigned in disgust when their ideas were ignored. Bryan opposed U.S. entry into World War I. Blaine and Harrison clashed within days of the inauguration when Blaine tried to appoint his son as the No. 2 man at the State Department.

Henry Kissinger, who ran Nixon's foreign policy apparatus from the National Security Council from 1969 to 1973, said Nixon didn't even invite Secretary of State William Rogers to the first presidential meeting with the Soviet ambassador to Washington.

According to Kissinger, Nixon "moved sensitive negotiations into the White House where he could supervise them directly, get the credit personally and avoid the bureaucratic disputes or inertia that he found so distasteful."

John F. Kennedy also complained of such inertia and sent his brother Robert on a few foreign missions.

Since Shultz took office in 1982, there has been no evidence that he has been cut out in such a way. Shultz has been the leading figure in talks with the Soviets and has gotten his way on most anti-terrorism policies. No national security adviser has dominated policy in the Reagan administration as did Kissinger or Carter's aide Zbigniew Brzezinski.

Yet history shows that even a highly trusted secretary isn't always in total control. John Foster Dulles, rated as the most trusted secretary of state of this century, didn't always get his way with Dwight Eisenhower.

And even Haig — who complained of being done in by "wizards" on the White House staff — says "it does not really matter whether the secretary of state or the national security adviser or some other official carries out the president's foreign policy and speaks for the administration on these questions."

What matters, says Haig, is that it's only one person at a time.

Officials seek clues to hospital baby deaths

DENVER (AP) — An investigation of whether a shut-off oxygen supply caused the death of a 4-day-old boy in Children's Hospital has been widened to include the deaths of at least two other infants, police say.

Police and the district attorney's office say they are trying to determine whether the infants died because a valve was closed on the fresh oxygen supply in the Newborn Center on Nov. 29. That left 19 critically ill babies in incubators without supplemental oxygen for about two minutes.

Four babies died in the hospital between the oxygen shut-down and Thursday, when the hospital admitted the problem, according to records at the Denver coroner's office.

Only one of those deaths has been ruled out as being connected because that infant was admitted after the incident, police Detective John Wyckoff said Saturday.

"There is a possibility that there are two or more infants involved," Wyckoff said. He said police would check records to determine if the other dead infants were on the supplemental oxygen when the system was shut off.

The hospital has given conflicting statements about why the valve shut off, whether by mechanical failure, intentionally or by mistake.

Hospital officials had said Friday that one infant might have died because his fresh oxygen was cut off, and an autopsy was planned. But they said then that the other deaths over the five-day period could not be linked to the loss of the oxygen supply.

Wyckoff complained that the hospital's in-house investigation was done by security officers and not trained investigators. "They did not have the experience," he said. "Valuable time and valuable evidence, such as fingerprints, have been lost."

A supervisor for Hospital Shared Services of Colorado, which provides guards for Children's, would not comment on the investigation done by its employees. Julia Fitz-Randolph, spokeswoman for Children's, also had no comment "other than to say we are cooperating fully with the police."

The 4-dayr-old who died had "serious congenital abnormalities and serious lung disorders," said Children's medical director David Tubergen. He said there was no way to tell whether the oxygen loss affected the baby but added that his recovery had been "anticipated and expected, though not certain."

Police and the prosecutor's office started their probes Friday, after conflicting reports about the hospital's investigation.

Many companies don't give holiday bonuses

BOSTON (AP) — The tradition of a cash holiday bonus for employees is disappearing or being replaced by the giving of turkeys, office parties and performance awards, according to a survey.

"Interestingly enough, most companies do not give out Christmas bonuses and have not had a recent Christmas bonus plan," said Claire Connolly of TeleSearch, an executive search firm that conducted the survey last month.

"Our company has had a Christmas bonus program and we just assumed that that was the norm," said Ms. Connolly, a senior vice president of the Natick-based company.

TeleSearch said it surveyed 80 major companies, primarily in the Northeast, representing high technology, manufacturing, financial services, insurance, publishing and other fields.

Of those polled, 78 percent said they will give no holiday bonus of any kind this year. Fifteen percent said they will give small cash bonuses to administrative help, while 7.5 percent will give turkeys or hams.

In lieu of two-weeks' pay or other Christmas bonuses, many companies give year-end bonuses based on the performance of the employee or the company or both, said Robert Nadel, a senior vice president of the Hay Group, a management consulting firm that specializes in employee benefits.

"Christmas bonuses are a thing of thepast as Christmas bonuses. I would say there is a use of year-end bonuses," Nadel said from his New York office.

And these year-end bonuses tend to be concentrated in companies such as law firms and investment banks, he said.

"These companies have become very performance-oriented," he said, adding that they don't want employees to expect a fixed, lump-sum payment unrelated to how well they or the company did in the previous year.

Nadel said Christmas bonuses were never as common as it might be believed, and that they seem to be concentrated in blue-collar jobs.

"There's a potential tax implication," he added. "The company that gives out the turkey or the dinner or the tickets or whatever may be considered giving a gift, where the company that gives you two weeks' salary is giving you compensation which is taxable."

Avon Products Inc., the New York-based cosmetics company, discontinued its holiday bonuses about three years ago in favor of an enhanced retirement program, Avon spokesman John Cox said.

"Under the Christmas bonus plan, it depended on how well the company did," he said. "This is a fixed amount people can count on."

G.D. Searle & Co., the Skokie, Ill.-based pharmaceuticals company, gives its employees a different kind of holiday bonus.

"Our company closes down on Christmas Eve and opens up the day after New Year's," said Bill Greener, a Searle spokesman.

"In effect, the company's Christmas bonus is one week's vacation with pay," he said. "It has absolutely nothing to do with other vacations or holidays."

Raytheon Co., the Lexington-based defense and consumer products conglomerate, offers no type of Christmas bonuses or gifts, spokesman Larry McCracken said.

For McCracken, a new employee, that is no change.

"I worked 21 years for the United States Air Force and we didn't have any Christmas bonuses either," he said.

Church upset over condom message in AIDS program

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Roman Catholic Archdiocese withdrew its support of an educational program on AIDs because the program implied that the church sanctioned use of condoms.

But the head of AIDS Project Los Angeles insists that Catholics were told that contraceptives were not approved.

"We certainly would never advocate that individuals do something that would be in conflict with their own religious beliefs," Paul Van Ness, the executive director of AIDS Project, said Saturday night.

AIDS Project presentations, primarily an educational program that conducts seminars specifically for the Spanish-speaking community, includes explicit descriptions on the use of condoms as a method to prevent transmission of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Archbishop Roger Mahony said in a statement Saturday that such AIDS-preventative descriptions would give the impression the church supported such measures.

"In the issue of AIDS, such use implies either heterosexual promiscuity or homosexual activity," Mahony said. "The church approves of neither."

But Mahony's spokesman said the archdiocese might resume its role in the education program if the discussion of controlling AIDS is limited to abstinence or "if they have other methods that are not contrary to church teaching."

Opinion

Mike Sullivan

It's been said that power is the ultimate high. And, like other producers of psychological "highs," that power can be addictive. I wouldn't argue with either assessment.

What brings this to mind is the current examination of the latest abuses of governmental power in this country.

To understand what happened, it's necessary to look at the history of government.

History, obviously, is only as accurate as the commitment of the historian to separate facts from fancy — not always an easy task. But consider this view:

Ten thousand years ago humans lived as hunters-gatherers. As nearly as we can tell, they began organizing into specific communities and developing trades and crafts some 6,000-7,000 years ago — in the Middle East.

From the beginning of community life there've been leaders. Some were elected; others achieved power in less democratic fashion.

Leadership, or power, often went to whoever was strong enough to acquire it. In a primitive society, where everyday life was a struggle for survival, that made some sense. Gang leaders, in cities such as Chicago, understand this principle well.

As the human population grew, what we call civilization grew. As part of that growth, what we know as government evolved — expanding beyond the coterie of the chief and his henchmen into a much larger structure, financed by tribute exacted from the people in the form of taxes.

As society became more sophisticated and survival less of an ordeal, leaders drew farther away from the daily problems of their tribes and established elaborate systems of ensuring that they or their hand-picked successors would stay in control and maintain the policies they'd established. Those policies generally led to the enrichment of the royal treasury and the poverty of the multitudes.

This felicitous arrangement was accomplished in two ways — by convincing enough people that the king's power was divinely ordained and by creating armed forces to enforce the divinely inspired decrees.

Decked out in matching uniforms and provided with plenty of the latest weapons, the gangs — excuse me, armies — were eventually also used to defend turf against marauders and to expand the turf to increase the king's glory.

Today we like to think of ourselves as civilized. Our own expansionist era's over. We no longer use armies to expand our sphere of influence; they're purely for defensive purposes, aren't they? Neither do we sanction murders of heads of state we disagree with, do we?

The idea of leadership has changed more slowly. Those who badly desire power still often tend to abuse it. They become so convinced of the rightness of their cause and the legitimacy of their rule that the notion of accountability is lost.

As long as the American people desire strong leaders, abuse of power will remain a possibility. Strong leaders tend to eventually see themselves as above normal codes of conduct.

"It's a jungle out there," the thinking seems to be, "and we'll do whatever we have to to stay on top."

To an extent, that attitude is understandable. The world is a dangerous place. But if civilization is to mean anything at all, if democracy is to work, there must be open lines of communication. Power in America derives from the people, and those who govern the country can't forget that. They must deal honestly with us. It's one of the things that make America unique.

Leadership at the top may be less important today than efficient and honest administration.

The days of gunboat diplomacy are over. Third World nations have found ways in which high-tech governments such as ours are vulnerable. What are we to do? Continue to bluster and bluff? Wipe them out? Make secret deals with them? Or should we open regular avenues of communication with them?

How much longer can the current tensions continue before something snaps somewhere?

We have a system of government that works fairly well. The breakdowns result when the wrong people are chosen to run it.

We shouldn't be surprised that things have turned out the way they have. The Reaganauts made it clear at the outset that they planned to restructure government. They saw it as their mission.

Government has become a major player in American life and will be with us a long time, like it or not. When deciding who will run it, we need to ask why power is being sought. A tip-off as to how it will be used can usually be found by looking at the power-seeker's record. We can learn a lot from history.

Inglorious treatment of Hansen superintendent unjustified

Eldon J. Larson

After attending the recent school board meeting at Hansen on Dec. 1, I wish to express my opinion to patrons, board members, teachers, students and the HEA and IEA.

It was stated by the spokesman for the HEA that there has been a steady erosion of education at Hansen that would not have occurred if the school board would have worked with teachers, parents and students.

I know for a fact that parents, teachers, and students have been told to talk to the board members at meetings if they have any questions at all. When Superintendent Smith took the job at Hansen, the district had serious financial problems. Except for the first couple of years of trying to get the district on its feet financially, the curriculum has been improved every year, and a higher caliber of teachers have been hired. Superintendent Smith and the teachers have been involved in the process of improving the curriculum, but it is a slow process to improve it and not lose the good points you already have.

It was not a surprise to hear that the HEA voiced a resolution of no confidence in Superintendent Smith, especially since the regional director for IEA was there.

I think it is a shame when a person such as Superintendent Smith who is doing such a fine job with the students, teachers, school board, and, finally, patrons (who have to foot the bill), has to take a slap in the face because a few people think this is the best way to eliminate leadership and an administration that is responsible to the district — not just teachers.

We all know our teachers could use more pay, but this area is not in the best of financial shape because of the agriculture situation, and that is where the biggest share comes from.

We are all experiencing hard times and believe we should be getting more. No school district could run as efficient or as well as ours has, if the board didn't know what was going on. Superintendent Smith has worked very hard at informing the board of progress in all aspects of the school, and at the same time, trying to convey to the staff wishes of the board and patrons, and vice versa.

It is my opinion, after watching what has been going on for quite a few years and going through a few of these situations, that there is an underlying problem that needs to be corrected.

It seems like these problems always come from the same source, the IEA, and I really don't believe they come from this source just because it is better at defining the problems. I think their main intent is to discredit our superintendent, and, in the long run, make it impossible for him to do his job properly.

If that happened and he were replaced, they would have a better chance to dictate to the board how our school should be run. I don't think this superintendent or the board minds constructive criticism, but I don't think they will stand for having it shoved down their throats.

The HEA has stated that Superintendent Smith advised the board to deny credits of pay increases. The board has the right to review such credits to insure that they are viable in field courses that would benefit the district and the students involved, and not just a three-hour seminar with three credits whether you attended or not.

It has been said that Superintendent Smith does not confer with the teachers enough about the way the district handles money and the way it should be spent. If that is how it was done, this district would be floating overrides, instead of having money left in case of emergencies.

It has also been said that Superintendent Smith does not allow teachers to have sufficient teaching supplies. When you are trying to run a business or a school, and supplies are being purchased and used to a ridiculous extent, you should naturally do something about it. I think this is only good management.

The HEA questions the hiring of certified administrative employees. It is very hard for me to understand how a few teachers in our school district can believe they are such financial wizards and lawyers that they question the board's actions on matters that the state says you must comply with.

I don't think our superintendent is overpaid by one cent. He has worked hard and is still working hard. Very few people have spent as much time working with the districts to our east and west to compile information on the recent matter of consolidation. I agree with the superintendent — his record speaks for itself.

I think some teachers should get to work and try to establish a record that would speak highly of them, instead of insisting "You owe me!," and I'm sure they would be gladly paid for their labors.

I am sure you have noticed my references to the teachers as "a few." I would really be surprised if there were more than a few teachers that would sign the statement submitted to the board.

Most of the accusations on the list are trivial, false, or something to make the list look longer. Their idea to eliminate the problem is to replace our superintendent and then let the HEA and IEA help us with the decision making process of our school district. I really can't believe they think we are that naive.

I now see why the Idaho Education Association is having problems. They have already lost a large amount of creditability, and, through episodes such as this, are going to lose the rest.

Superintendent Smith is not perfect, and neither is anybody else, but he is as close as we have come with a superintendent for a very long time.

Our school has a better curriculum, is better off financially, and has better morale than it has had in a very long time. We will always have problems of some nature. I think the board, the administration, and most teachers are going to try very hard to make it better in the future.

I just think it is a shame that a few are attacking Superintendent Smith and his administrative ability with the excuse of making a better school for our students, when that is not at all the idea. I think a few of the points the teachers made to improve our school for all concerned have merit, and I am sure the board and administration will try to work with them, because they have the best interests of the school at heart.

Lets put this behind us, work together, and make a better school for the kids. They are going to need the best education they can get.

Eldon J. Larson is a 25-year-resident of the Hansen area and has two children who graduated from Hansen High School.

Guidelines for drug testing of federal workers make sense

James Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — The capital last week was in the midst of one of its sky-is-falling flaps.

This had nothing to do with the Israelis, the Iranians and the contras; in that dismaying affair great chunks of firmament in fact are raining down. This flap had to do with new guidelines for the drug testing of federal employees.

The guidelines make good sense to me, but they have provoked some terrible hollering from union spokesmen and area politicians. Rep. Frank R. Wolf, R-Va., termed it "unfair" to single out federal workers when there is no reason to believe they use prohibited drugs to any greater degree than workers in the private sector. Various court challenges are promised.

On examination, the guidelines are not as "frightening" as The Washington Post would have us believe. If the rules are sensibly followed, no federal employee will be fired without cause. No one's civil rights will be grossly abused. About all that will happen is that a handful of confirmed addicts will be routed from truly sensitive positions — and what in the world is wrong with that?

The guidelines require agency heads to determine which of their employees are in "sensitive" jobs. Technically speaking, about half of the government's 2.1 million employees have positions that in some way are "special sensitive, critical sensitive, or non-critical sensitive," but only a small fraction of these employees will be included in a pool subject to testing.

Who are these workers? The pool "may include positions where national-security considerations are present, as well as positions where there is a clear impact on public health or safety (e.g., air-traffic controllers, operators of motor vehicles, medical nursing and related health-care personnel) or positions relating to illegal drug control (e.g., law enforcement officers such as customs agents and drug enforcement agents)."

The guidelines provide other examples. Those who work on aircraft maintenance may be tested. Those who work with explosives or toxic gases may be covered. The rules would affect "employees uniquely positioned to exploit highly sensitive computer or financial data for financial gain."

It is baffling to understand the reasoning of those who object to testing such governmental employees. The tests, once they have been decided upon, must be announced 60 days in advance. Before anyone is fired, a positive test must be confirmed — and outright dismissal is a last resort that presumably would be reserved for those who flatly refuse to be tested or those whose addiction cannot be tolerated. In any event, an employee in the civil service has abundant avenues of appeal against termination or other discipline.

Are these procedures unjust? Unreasonable? They strike me as fully within the government's power as an employer. Surely the government has a right to insist that its own employees obey federal laws — and possession of an illicit drug is flat out against federal law. The offense is not to be equated with a parking tag or a speeding ticket. We are talking of mind-altering drugs, of addictive drugs, of heroin, cocaine and crack.

It is complained that drug testing turns the law on its head — that workers are presumed guilty until proved innocent. This is hokum. The program has nothing to do with criminal law. It has everything to do with conditions of federal employment in especially sensitive positions. No one is compelled to work for the government. It's a free country. But federal employment is a privilege, not a right.

I keep coming back to the analogy of air travel. More than 100 million persons board commercial airplanes every year. Every one of them has to go through a security check before passing through a gate. This often involves opening a suitcase or a purse. Security guards have authority to rummage at will in a traveler's most personal belongings. Is this "intrusive"? Of course it is, but it is a reasonable condition of air-transportation. If you don't like it, take a train or go by bus. No one is compelled to fly.

The Henny Pennies who are complaining so hysterically about these guidelines start with a paranoid assumption. They assume that federal department heads are modern-day Torquemadas, drooling with eagerness to examine everybody's urine. Somewhere in the vast fields of federal employment such fiendish bosses may be in charge. Some abuses of the guidelines may occur. But true abuses of disciplinary power will be few, and the gain to good government will be substantial. I'd try the program for a few years and see if it's the sky that is falling, or only a couple of acorns.

Moderate GOP, Demos buoyed by House speaker results

Quane Kenyon

BOISE — Jubilation swept through the halls of the Idaho Legislature this past week, with Democrats and moderates alike celebrating the victory of moderate Tom Boyd in the battle for House speaker.

"I'm glad we're finally going to have some good times here," said a veteran Democrat senator, who has had to sit through years of leadership from very conservative Republicans.

The six-term veteran from Genesee won an almost unprecedented close election over Robert Geddes of Preston. There were two tie votes among the 64 GOP members of the House before Boyd won.

House veterans couldn't recall the last time a ballot for speaker between two candidates ended in a tie.

House Democrats didn't get to take part in the election for speaker, but almost universally praised the GOP choice as someone who will be easy to work with the next two sessions.

Most legislators agree it will be a major change from the last four years, when conservative Tom Stivers of Twin Falls directed the House.

And it appears that even Sen. James Risch of Boise, who along with Stivers made the GOP leadership decisions the last four years, is caught up in the spirit of change.

Risch, in recent speeches, has been urging almost the same things as governor-elect Cecil Andrus: bipartisan cooperation to solve the state's problems, an end to the negativism that has marked recent years and an emphasis on the positive.

The election of Boyd, besides signalling an abrupt end to the conservativism that has marked recent sessions, also hints at other changes.

Boyd's been a member of the House "steelheads," an unofficial coalition of moderate GOP members. The "steelhead" label fits lawmakers always swimming upstream against their more conservative brethren.

Higher education also might look for a boost now that Boyd has been elected. He's a strong supporter of the University of Idaho and has battled fruitlessly in recent years for better funding.

But the process of change in the Idaho Legislature apparently started many months ago.

It may have begun during the 1986 session, marked by name-calling and bitter political battles.

In the primary election, many of the most outspoken conservatives were sent packing by the voters. It continued in the general election and was apparent Thursday when Boyd and his moderate element won the speaker battle.

It also marked the end to other long-running trends. For years, House power has been concentrated in the Magic Valley. It hasn't been so much that legislators there were more capable than others. It was a matter of geographic balance.

Twin Falls area legislators served as a balance wheel between the populous Ada-Canyon area, eastern Idaho and northern Idaho.

Boyd's the first north Idaho lawmaker named speaker since Priest River logger William Doolittle in the 1959 session.

Geddes, like Boyd a farmer, also worked hard for the nomination, and the tie votes indicated he was within one of getting it. And Geddes, while acknowledging there would be a major change in leadership under Boyd, also said he would have run the House much differently than Stivers.

When informed of the action, many members of the Senate said they hoped it meant an end to the confrontations, deadlocks and political bickering that have marked recent sessions.

Iran-Contra dealings dominate GOP governors meeting

PARSIPPANY, N.J. (AP) — Republican governors, the big GOP winners in 1986, found their annual meeting Sunday dominated by talk of the Iran-Contra disclosures.

"Anyone want to talk about education?" asked Gov. John Sununu of New Hampshire during a news conference opening the three-day meeting. Nearly all the questions at the news conference dealt with the affair that has kept the Reagan administration in ferment the past two weeks.

Most of the GOP governors endorsed President Reagan's recent actions and his admission on Saturday that mistakes had been made.

As for potential political fallout, Gov. Thomas H. Kean of New Jersey said, "Something like this obviously isn't helpful to the party in power."

Gov. Richard Thornburgh of Pennsylvania said it was "far too premature to express any judgment whatsoever."

He added that "I want to see the evidence before I make any judgment."

"I am very happy he (Reagan) has admitted some mistakes have been made," said Gov.-elect George Mickelson of South Dakota.

Eight newly elected governors and 14 incumbents planned to attend the conference, which has an agenda tilted heavily toward politics.

They also are scheduled to have a closed session with former President Richard M. Nixon. The subject was foreign policy although memories of Watergate were being stirred by the troubles of the current Republican administration.

In the 1986 elections, Republicans picked up eight governorships to bring their national total to 24 when all the new chief executives take office. In 26 states the governors will be Democrats.

Offering a post-election assessment after the GOP lost eight Senate seats and saw the Democrats regain control of the chamber, Republican chairman Frank F. Fahrenkopf Jr. pointed to the "resounding Republican success in governors races."

He said the GOP gains "will provide a significant boost to Republican efforts toward fair and honest redistricting and reapportionment in the next decade."

Among the governors-elect planning to attend was Guy Hunt, the first Republican elected governor of Alabama this century.

Other governors-elect expected to attend were Evan Meecham of Arizona, Mike Hayden of Kansas, John R. McKernan Jr. of Maine, Kay Orr of Nebraska, Gary Carruthers of New Mexico, George Mickelson of South Dakota and Tommy Thompson of Wisconsin.

The agenda on Sunday was strictly social with formal sessions on Monday highlighted by two political discussions.

Political consultants Charles Black, Roger Ailes and Edward Rollins were scheduled to discuss the impact of the 1986 election. Rollins was manager of President Reagan's 1984 re-election campaign; Black is running Rep. Jack Kemp's exploration of a possible 1988 candidacy; and Ailes is a veteran media consultant.

Later in the day, Fahrenkopf was to join pollsters Lance Tarrance, Robert Teeter and Louis Harris to discuss the elections and the future of the GOP.

Ms. Davis said the political impact of the disclosures of secret arms sales to Iran and the channeling of money to the Contra forces in Central America is "something the governors will be talking about constantly."

Two national polls taken since the disclosures said Reagan's approval rating had dropped — in one survey by 21 points — and that a majority of people believed they weren't getting the full truth about the affair.

Yule displays prompt disputes

By The Associated Press

A Mississippi state building was decorated with a lighted Christmas cross despite threats of a lawsuit, while officials in a California community sought to close down Santa's Dream House because of neighbors' complaints.

The zoning chief in Glendale, Calif., told Robert George on Saturday that he had violated the law in converting his home into a winter wonderland of 5,000 ornaments, 22,000 lights, 95 Christmas trees and barrels of toys.

Neighbors had complained of noise and congestion from up to 500 visitors a day to the home, where George conducts tours in a Santa Claus outfit for needy and handicapped children.

In Jackson, Miss., Jimmy Palmer, director of the state General Services Administration, said Gov. Bill Allain gave approval to light a cross on the 20-story Walter Sillers Building on Saturday after reviewing court cases around the nation.

The Mississippi American Civil Liberties Union had alleged that the cross, a tradition since 1979, breached the constitutional separation of church and state.

"It looks like once again the state of Mississippi has chosen to defy federal law and tried to do things its way," Mississippi ACLU executive director Hilary Chiz said after the lighting.

Palmer said the state added Christmas tree designs and the words "love" and "joy" to the sides of the building because of a court decision that he said allows religious symbols when they are part of a display containing secular ones.

Glendale zoning chief John McKenna said George could be forced to remove the lights, ornaments, trees and toys from his home, because the law says the property can be used for residential purposes only.

"We have nothing against Santa Claus, but I think this guy is just a con man," said Denise Ordaz, who lives next door. "Traffic is a mess here because people drive by to see his house."

The 63-year-old George, who was the official White House Santa Claus under six presidents, is being represented by feminist attorney Gloria Allred, who put on a red Santa's cap and sat on George's lap during a Saturday news conference at his home.

Swiss bank freezes Iran arms account

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — A Swiss bank has frozen an account used to deposit money stemming from U.S. arms sales to Iran, Foreign Ministry spokesman Clemens Birrer said Sunday.

He said the bank acted after being told by the Swiss government that U.S. officials asked for Swiss help last Friday in investigating the arms scandal. Birrer did not identify the bank.

In Washington, officials in the state and justice departments declined comment. Justice Department spokesman Pat Korton said any such request would have originated in his department and been passed on to Switzerland through the State Department.

He said a mutual-legal-assistance treaty with Switzerland would cover such a request.

Birrer told The Associated Press the U.S. request dealt with only one account into which money from the arms deal was deposited. He would not say who controlled the account or if the money from it was channeled to third parties.

Birrer said: "The U.S. request asked for appropriate action on one bank account into which money from the Iran arms sales was deposited. I cannot tell you any more."

Attorney General Edwin Meese III said last month that up to $30 million from the arms deal was "deposited in bank accounts which were under the control" of Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Last week, a U.S. government source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said money from the arms deal also went into a Central Intelligence Agency bank account in Switzerland. The source said some money from that account was used to handle covert assistance to Afghan rebels.

Birrer said the Swiss Justice Ministry is studying the U.S. request for help in the investigation.

Swiss officials have said a transfer of arms deal profits to accounts controlled by the Contras would not have violated Swiss banking laws.

On Sunday, the Swiss newspaper Sonntagsblick, citing unidentified arms dealers as sources, said some U.S. military equipment was shipped to Iran by way of Switzerland.

A 1983 delivery included at least three Cobra helicopter gunships, the newspaper quoted one source as saying.

Ministers call for sheriff to resign

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A group of ministers has called for a boycott of major businesses in a suburban area unless the sheriff there resigns for threatening to stop and question blacks seen in affluent white neighborhoods.

Jefferson Parish Sheriff Harry Lee dropped the plan less than 24 hours after announcing it Tuesday amid a groundswell of outrage.

But demands for action against Lee continued this weekend, and at least one national civil rights figure endorsed the boycott proposal.

"Maybe they can do something to help create a better environment over there," said Mary Frances Berry, a member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights from Washington.

"I can't think of any other way to do it, other than peaceful, non-violent protest,"

Ms. Berry and Clarence Pendleton Jr., the commission chairman who was appointed by President Reagan, were both in New Orleans for speaking engagements.

They agreed that Lee blundered when he ordered deputies to stop and question blacks traveling in white neighborhoods.

"This is a real bad thing that's happened. Now, they have to ask what's the next step. They have to find out how it got this far, to sit down and talk, to reach a better understanding," Pendleton said.

The West Bank United Ministers, an organization that claims to represent 5,000 church members, called for Lee's resignation Saturday and has threatened a boycott if he does not do so by Tuesday.

In what he described as an intensified campaign to fight rising crime in New Orleans' suburbs, Lee said Tuesday that $10,000 to $15,000 in overtime pay had been authorized during the Christmas holidays for patrols by 45 additional uniformed and plainclothes officers through residential and commercial sections of Jefferson Parish.

He withdrew the plan Wednesday.

A spokeswoman in the sheriff's office said he was not available for comment Sunday on the resignation demands and boycott threats.

The state chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union demanded that Lee resign immediately after he announced the plan.

Lee spent the past several days meeting with civil rights groups in an effort to explain the controversy. But the Chinese-American sheriff emerged from one meeting saying he was not sure whether he had accomplished anything.

32 American Rhodes scholars announced

CLAREMONT, Calif. (AP) — An Air Force cadet who as a boy fled Vietnam with the "boat people" nearly a dozen years ago is among 32 Americans chosen as 1987 Rhodes Scholars, the Rhodes Scholarship Trust announced Sunday.

Others selected include 10 aspiring scientists, four former congressional interns, a Peace Corps volunteer and a Mormon missionary. The 32 winners will join an international group of students chosen from 18 countries for two or three years of study at Oxford University in England, said David Alexander, president of Pomona College and American secretary of the Rhodes Scholarship Trust.

A third of the Rhodes Scholars this year are women, two are black, three are Asians and four winners hail from Yale University, which had the most graduates on the list. Women have been selected only since 1976.

Hoang Nhu Tran, 21, who will be the second Vietnamese graduate from the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado and whose family lives in Rohnert Park, Calif., 35 miles north of San Francisco, is the first Vietnamese Rhodes Scholar.

He and his parents, a brother and an aunt fled Vietnam by boat in 1975 before the fall of Saigon.

Among the other winners were Georgetown University's Nina Bowen, from Petersburg, Alaska, who has been a Peace Corps volunteer in the African nation of Sierra Leone since 1985.

Brett Gilbert Scharffs of Salt Lake City, and also from Georgetown, was a Mormon missionary to Japan and an intern with the U.S. trade representative there, Alexander said. Scharffs learned Chinese in Shanghai and plans to study the language.

Finalists chosen from the 1,143 applicants nationwide were interviewed Saturday in regional competitions leaning on four qualities — intellectual attainment, character, leadership and physical vigor, Alexander said.

The Rhodes Scholarships were established in 1902 by Cecil John Rhodes, a British politician-diamond baron who hoped that the scholarships would contribute to world understanding.

Boxer's scratch

Any two bareknuckle boxers of old began their fight on opposite sides of a line one or the other scratched in the dirt. If one were knocked down, he had 30 seconds to get up and scratch a new line so they could begin again. This was the origin of our phrase "to start from scratch."

Q. How long does it take the Capistrano swallows to get to Argentina?

A. About six weeks, but I don't know why. They'd make better time on the Love Boat.

INJURED ELBOWS

Archaeologists have turned up prehistoric human skeletons that show misshapen elbow joints. Evidently from an ailment they liken to some such suffered by modern tennis players. Except they call it "spear elbow."

Why are people hit by strokes more likely to suffer same in the winter or early spring rather than at another time of year? Doctors don't know that, either.

Eight children die in house fire

BAMBERG, S.C. (AP) — One of 11 children left alone at home apparently poured gasoline on a potbellied stove that had died out early Sunday, setting a fire that raced through the house, killing eight of them, authorities said.

Three adults were arrested and charged with neglect by a legal custodian. Three children escaped the blaze and were in protective custody in foster homes, Bamberg County Sheriff Ed Darnell said.

Four children apparently escaped the fire, but one died when he went back in the house to try to help the others, Darnell said.

"This is a terrible tragedy. It is a very horrible thing," Darnell said.

The children were left alone in the home about 10 p.m. Saturday, and when a fire in a wood-burning, potbellied stove died out, one of the children apparently poured gasoline in it because he was cold, Darnell sad.

Man revived from drowning dies

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — A man whose heartbeat was restored after he apparently was underwater for nearly an hour died Sunday after he was removed from life-support equipment at University Hospitals.

The official cause of Donald Radloff's death was listed as drowning.

"The positive breathing equipment that forced Radloff to breathe was disconnected shortly before noon today," hospital spokesman Dean Borg said Sunday. "The family participated in today's decision to remove the equipment that forced him to breathe."

Radloff never regained consciousness. His condition had deteriorated rapidly Saturday night, Borg said.

Chimp heart transplant proposed

NEW YORK (AP) — Surgeons at a New York City hospital want to use a chimpanzee heart to keep a dying patient alive until a human heart is available, a newspaper reported Sunday.

Doctors have submitted a proposal to perform the animal-to-human heart transplant to Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center's institutional review board, which must approve any research involving patients, the Daily News said.

The last animal-to-human heart transplant was the 1984 "Baby Fae" case, which sparked controversy over the ethics of using animal hearts in transplants.

Pet bear kills 11-year-old boy

SAND SPRINGS, Okla. (AP) — A 300-pound black bear being kept as a pet killed an 11-year-old boy as he attempted to feed it an ear of corn, authorities said.

Samuel Nipps, 11, was pronounced dead Saturday at the home of Danny Boatman, who was keeping the bear chained in his front yard as a favor for a friend, said Bill Williams, spokesman for the Osage County Sheriff's Department.

When the bear attacked Samuel, Boatman's son, who was also feeding the bear, ran inside and called a next-door neighbor. The neighbor shot and killed the bear, authorities said.

Steps against spouse abuse urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Judges should take a tougher stand in handling domestic violence cases by barring defendants from their own homes more frequently, a federal study issued Sunday concludes.

The report by the National Institute of Justice says that courts ought to do a better job of protecting domestic violence victims by requiring that the accused person stay away during the period before a trial.

Researchers in the field of spouse abuse feel that such protection is needed in most domestic violence cases, says the NIJ study.

Caribou roundup called off early

HOLYROOD, Newfoundland (AP) — Wildlife officials called an early end Sunday to a caribou roundup after snow made it difficult to spot the reindeer-like animals and headed home with 27 of the beasts.

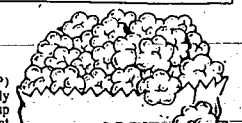

Sharpshooters in helicopters began bringing down the animals with tranquilizer darts on Friday, taking them by helicopter to be loaded onto the truck that will haul them 1,200 miles to Maine.

Caribou, once so plentiful in Maine that its meat stocked lumber camps and was sold commercially, disappeared in 1908. Newfoundlanders have started several herds from nursery herds like the one they are giving as goodwill gesture to Maine.

The animals rounded up were part of a herd of about 5,500 roaming North America's easternmost region, where they were once nearly extinct.

"We didn't get our full 30," said Rob Greenwood of the Newfoundland Wildlife Division. "We had some pretty hard flurries. The boys had trouble seeing the caribou," which turn light tan this time of year.

"We would have been more happy with 30. But 27 is adequate breeding stock.

Pearl Harbor anniversary observed

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii (AP) — Four F4 Phantom jets screamed overhead Sunday, and one veered off to create the symbolic missing man formation, ending a minute of silence on the 45th anniversary of the Japanese attack that brought the nation into World War II.

Top military officers, representatives of veterans' and patriotic groups and local dignitaries gathered on the USS Arizona Memorial for a 45-minute ceremony to observe the anniversary of the sneak attack.

One by one, representatives of the five military services and more than a dozen civilian groups pulled individual blossoms from floral wreaths and dropped them through the memorial's well onto the harbor's still water.

The tribute to the 2,403 Americans killed in the Dec. 7, 1941, attack on Pearl Harbor and other military installations on the island of Oahu included a warning that the United States must never again allow itself to be caught off-guard.

"With all the keen vision imparted by hindsight, we may rightly marvel at the complacency we showed then in a world aflame with war and with a deteriorating diplomatic situation," said Vice Adm. Huntington Hardisty, deputy commander of the U.S. Pacific Fleet.

"We consistently underestimated the potential enemy's willingness and ability to do us harm," Hardisty said.

Soviet military doctrine relies on getting "a quick decisive blow struck before the adversary can fully collect his forces or even his thoughts," Hardisty said.

"It is not a new idea, as this memorial attests. Our Pacific strategy of ready forward deployed forces demonstrates that we will not be caught off guard."

On that Sunday morning 45 years ago, more than 100 Japanese planes were launched from six aircraft carriers in a naval task force that had made its way undetected to a position 240 miles north of Oahu.

The surprise was complete as 24 torpedo planes and dive bombers in the first wave swept across the island from the north. The first bombs fell as preparations were being made for the daily raising of the U.S. flags on the 96 ships that were in port that morning.

In less than two hours, the U.S. Pacific Fleet was devastated with 18 major warships either sunk or seriously damaged.

Among them was the 608-foot battleship Arizona, which was hit just forward of the bridge by a bomb that penetrated several decks before exploding in a fuel storage area.

Fire quickly spread to the powder magazines and, 15 minutes after the attack began, the Arizona exploded. It sank in less than nine minutes.

Of the 1,550 sailors and Marines aboard the Arizona that morning, only 289 survived. The bodies of 105 were recovered, and more than 1,000 men remain entombed in the ship.

Blast rips downtown buildings

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — An explosion in the heart of the downtown area early Sunday destroyed a row of specialty shops, blew out scores of windows in a four-block area and frightened guests at a hotel, authorities said.

A guest at the 509-room Worthington Hotel was cut by glass, but no serious injuries were reported in the blast, which occurred about 3 a.m. and caused an estimated $2 million damage, said Fire Department spokesman Butch Hall.

A natural gas leak inside a cafe probably caused the explosion, Hall said.

Two cafes, a print shop, an optometrist's office and a bookstore were destroyed, and at least 20 other businesses were damaged in the blast across the street from the Tandy Center shopping mall, the spokesman said.

"Had it happened three hours earlier, I'd hate to think about it," Hall said. "This is a heavily traveled area."

The blast blew out windows in 162 rooms in the Worthington Hotel and shattered a 30-foot glass wall in a ballroom lobby but caused no structural damage, said hotel marketing director Tom Weiskopf.

"Some people got a hell of a wake-up call," said W.P. White, a hotel guest from San Angelo, Texas.

"I thought it was an airplane crash," said hotel guest Barbara Aucoin of Nashville, Tenn. "It shook the bed and everything."

One guest slept through the explosion, Hall said.

"He wouldn't answer the door so we beat the door down with an ax," he said. "When we got in there, the room was covered with glass. There was glass all over his bed. He wanted to know what had happened."

Because of falling glass and weakened structures, investigators waited until daybreak to search the one-story shops. Six blocks were sealed off.

"It's kind of an eerie thing to be walking the street and hear crunching. It's like walking on ice," Hall said. "The glass is about an inch thick on the street."

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING
THE FACTS
1. The transfer will ensure a broad range of services.
2. The hospital will be controlled by local people with a local board.
3. The hospital cannot be sold by the non-profit corporation.
4. Any excess of revenue over expenses does not go to "management" or "corporate members" - it stays in the non-profit corporation to buy new equipment and improve services.
5. Private businesses are protected because:
   a. Internal revenue code restricts the types of business.
   b. Local membership and board will regulate the corporation activities.
   c. Unrelated business income (if any) will be taxed like any other business.
   d. The county commissioners in the transfer agreement will limit the scope of business.
6. The non-profit hospital will provide services regardless of the patient's ability to pay.
7. The transfer is necessary to increase the hospital's chances for survival.

CSI offers new course

TWIN FALLS — "Survey of World Religions," a three-credit course, will be offered for the first time at the College of Southern Idaho during the spring semester.

Instructor Brenda Larsen said she will cover the seven major living world religions — Hinduism, Buddhism, Chinese Confucianism, Taoism, Judaism, Christianity and Islam.

She will give historical background and have reading on each religion, as well as visual materials on the countries involved. Larsen said the religious ideas will be explored from a philosophical standpoint.

The class, listed as Philosophy 111, meets from 7 to 10 p.m. Wednesdays on campus. Students can register at the Taylor Administration Building.

Headless rooster story had legs to stand on

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR READERS: A Michigan reader asked me to prove that he was neither nuts nor the world's biggest storyteller when he recounted the story about a decapitated rooster that lived several days with his head chopped off. (He had read about it in Life magazine in the early '50s.)

"Please help. My reputation is riding on this," he pleaded. "Maybe one of your readers remembers it and can back me up."

I replied: "Life magazine ceased publication in 1972, but if anyone out there can provide me with any information on the decapitated rooster, it will be something to crow about."

Well, came the dawn, and with it a letter, Federal Express, from Life magazine's top brass informing me that Life had, indeed, died as a WEEKLY in 1972, but continued to publish special reports twice a year. Then, in 1978, Life resumed publication as a monthly magazine, and celebrated its 50th anniversary on Nov. 15.

Readers informed me that the rooster story had appeared in the Oct. 22, 1945, issue of Life. I received over 100 photocopies of the article and six originals. There were pictures showing "Mike," the headless rooster, strutting around, hale and hearty.

According to Life: "Ever since Sept. 10 (1945), a Wyandotte rooster named Mike has been living a normal chicken's life though he has no head. He walks, flaps his wings, preens his feathers and when he hears other roosters crow, even answers with a few croaky gurgles.

"Mike lost his head in the usual rooster way: Mrs. L.A. Olsen, wife of a farmer in Fruita, Colo., 200 miles west of Denver, decided to have a chicken dinner. Mr. Olsen took Mike to the chopping block and axed off his head. Thereupon Mike got up and soon began to strut about. After decapitation, many chickens run around frantically before dying. Mike, however, kept going as if nothing had happened.

"What Mr. Olsen's ax had done was to clip off most of the skull but leave intact one ear, the jugular vein and the base of the brain, which controls motor functions. Still thriving and gaining weight, Mike has been on exhibition in Salt Lake City at 25 cents admission. His owners have put a $10,000 price tag on him."

Other photographs showed Mike being fed with milk and water from an eyedropper through his esophagus, which had not closed over. Mike was also fed a few small grains of corn, which he had no trouble digesting.

Now, lest you think that Mike was the only bird who lost his head and refused to die, readers sent me photocopies of several pages of a book titled "Believe It or Not," by Robert W. Ripley (published by Simon and Schuster in 1931). It seems that as far back as 1904, a black Minorca chicken in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., was beheaded, but walked around headless for 17 days. Other chickens made headlines when they lived headless for days, weeks and months in Coal City, Ill., Fresno, Calif., Middleport, Ohio, Mobile, Ala., and Walnut Grove, Mo.

Many readers wrote to say they had paid to see a headless chicken (or maybe it was a rooster) on exhibition in Long Beach, Calif., San Diego and Florida.

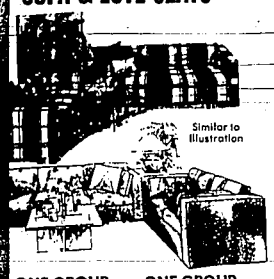

Another reader sent an undated column titled "The Ginger Jar," by Mrs. R.V. Jared from the Double-R Hatcheries, Olney, Ill. The entire column was devoted to yet another tale of a headless rooster in Woodstock, Conn. This one lived for only 3-1/2 days because no one could figure out a way to feed it.

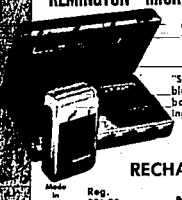

Mrs. Jared wrote: "But even immortal roosters have their weaknesses — at least this one did. He thumbed his nose (or rather his beak) at the ax; a little thing like being minus a head didn't disturb him; but when it came to eating — that was something else. It was like the poet put it:

'Men (and roosters) may live without poetry, music or art,
'They can live without conscience and live without heart,
'They can live without love, what is passion but pining?
'But where is the one who can live without dining?' "

Diabetes rate to skyrocket in next decades

Editor's note: Diabetes is a disease that affects some 15 million Americans. "How to Live with Diabetes" by Henry Dolger, M.D., and Bernard Seeman, is a book that dispels the notion that the diabetic is an invalid who cannot live a normal, active life. It offers common sense advice on coping with the disease.

By HENRY DOLGER, M.D., and BERNARD SEEMAN
Los Angeles Times

Practically anybody can get diabetes regardless of age, sex, race, or social station.

It grows more prevalent as it reaches out to mark an increasing number of people each year.

As for the economic cost of the disease, this was estimated at $5.7 billion in direct cost in 1982, and $10 billion in indirect cost.

During the next few decades the rate of increase in the number of diabetics in this country will be more than four times greater than the rate of increase in the total population.

Diabetes has been called a disease of old age. This is not strictly true. While 80 percent of all diabetics are over 40 years of age, there is also a considerable incidence of the disease in childhood, adolescence and young adulthood, with about 5 percent of all diabetics being of the juvenile-onset type.

In Britain, the Bedford Survey estimated that there are 200,000,000 diabetics in the world and that 14.5 percent of the individuals over age 50 are diabetic.

In the United States, however, a long-term study suggested that 30 percent of the population over age 60 has either overt or chemical (asymptomatic) diabetes.

As far as age is concerned, we are vulnerable to diabetes throughout our lifetimes. There is a gradual increase in susceptibility, with slight peaks at puberty and during pregnancy, until we reach the age of 40. Then there is a rapid jump.

FEMALES ARE MORE SUSCEPTIBLE

Diabetes overlooks neither sex but it does seem to have a special preference for women, except among certain ethnic groups such as the East Indians of Natal, South Africa, and some American-Indian tribes. Among these peoples, men have a higher incidence of diabetes. During childhood, adolescence and young adulthood, the disease plays no favorites between the sexes. At age 30, the woman becomes more susceptible until, between 45 and 65, she is twice as likely as a man to get the disease.

A striking increase in susceptibility occurs as the woman approaches the menopause.

One of the most unusual aspects of the disease is the apparent link to marriage and motherhood. The highest number of deaths from diabetes is among married women — and this includes widows and divorcees. The death rate among married women is almost twice as great as among single women.

Why should women be more susceptible to diabetes than men, and married women more than single women? Motherhood seems to be the reason. The woman with more children is more susceptible than the woman with fewer children. The more pregnancies a woman undergoes, the greater is the possibility that she will become diabetic.

RACE AND NATIONALITY ARE NOT FACTORS

In urban areas, where medical care and diagnosis are more easily available, existing diabetes is more frequently recognized and reported than in rural areas. These factors,

Diabetic's lifestyle requires educated, aware self-care

American Diabetes Association support group is launched

By JOAN BEAN
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — For the diabetic, every mouthful of food is a decision in self-care.

The kind of food, the quantity, how often it's taken, help regulate the diabetic's blood sugar level. Unknown ingredients in a restaurant's soup du jour or a friend's favorite casserole can send those levels soaring.

Life can become further complicated by the diabetic's need to monitor his glucose level, and for some, to inject himself with insulin.

To help diabetics learn how to care for themselves, and how to deal with translating that care into a "normal" lifestyle, a Twin Falls Chapter of the American Diabetes Association has been formed.

Elaine Oswald, chapter president, said people are finding out how important support groups are "and if you just have somebody else that you can relate to — somebody that you can talk to if you get depressed, or if you just have a question; that if you just have someone that understands, that's in the same place you are, that can identify with the problems you have — you can just call them up and talk to them."

For the recently diagnosed diabetic, it means getting answers to the new problems he faces. When the diagnosis is made, he is given instructions by his physician, but there is only so much he can learn at one time, said Oswald. And, because it is a disease the person must live with for a lifetime, ongoing information is important.

Dietitians, physicians and other health professionals will be addressing the group, Oswald said.

One resource the group will call upon is ADA member and registered nurse Ina Mae Seaich, a certified diabetes educator.

"In the beginning, about all you can teach (to the newly diagnosed) are survival skills, or else the person is going to suffer an overload," said Seaich.

"And then, as you go on, generally with outpatients, you're assessing what they have learned, correcting misunderstandings, making adjustments in the treatment plan, answering a lot of questions that have come up in their lives, helping them solve their individual problems and increasing their understanding of the disease."

Information must be tailored to suit the individual. In the case of a child, the focus might be on growth, a stimulated appetite and increased insulin needs.

Teen-agers want to know how to adjust meal plans and insulin when they are involved with sports or recreation.

Young adults are concerned about marriage, pregnancy and careers.

And, a person's lifestyle may make mealtime complicated.

"It's one thing," Seaich said, "to tell someone that they need to follow a diet that's low in fat and divide the carbohydrates throughout the day, and give them some kind of a meal plan — 'Eat this much carbohydrate, and these many calories at breakfast. . .'

"If you're using very, very simple foods, as they traditionally do when they're giving the examples, it works; but when you get home, and have a stew or casserole, or are going to eat out or something, suddenly it doesn't work anymore. You don't know what to do."

Seaich said all this cannot be learned in a short period of time. The individual must gradually learn how to handle these situations and do what he wants to do in life, and still take responsible care of his diabetic condition.

There are two types of diabetes. In Type I (which used to be called early childhood or juvenile diabetes, but because it can occur in adults, the name was changed), she said the basic problem is the insulin producing cells in the pancreas have been destroyed. These diabetics are dependent upon insulin injections for the rest of their lives, and would die soon without them.

In Type II, initially at least, there's only a minor problem in the pancreas itself; the insulin levels are normal. The difficulty lies with the body's cells, which are resisting the action of the insulin.

Most diabetics are not on insulin, she said. The majority of people who have Type II diabetes — the middle-aged and older — are typically overweight and inactive.

Treatment is not insulin injections, but rather, weight loss and exercise, or pills, which help the body use the insulin they already produce more effectively.

These people can usually put off taking insulin for a long time if they get their weight down.

In young people the symptoms are acute: increased urination, increased thirst, extreme hunger with weight loss. For adults, the symptoms are more vague. Some can have increased urination and thirst, but many just feel tired all the time.

The disease is sometimes discovered only after complications have set in. An eye doctor may find the damage that diabetes causes in the back of the eyes. Or, a physician may be consulted because of numbness and burning in the feet, caused by nerve damage occurring after many years of diabetes.

For more information about the support group, call Oswald at 733-9491.

Entrepreneur sells drug-free urine

By KEN HERMAN
The Associated Press

'I'm really startled that anybody would pay $49.95 for urine.' — Jeffrey Nightbyrd

AUSTIN, Texas — An entrepreneur is selling drug-free urine for $49.95 a bag in a business that a civil libertarian says could boom as drug tests become more common.

Byrd Laboratories' advertisement in an entertainment-oriented Austin newspaper says the urine is "for experimental purposes only." It guarantees "100 percent pure urine . . . suitable for unanticipated urine demand."

The business touts itself as "Your Urine Specialists."

Lab owner Jeffrey Nightbyrd, 32, said he was not interested in what customers did with the product. But he speculated that the most common use could be to beat on-the-job urine tests for drug use.

"The government says they have a right to take bodily fluids. I just decided I'd make some money off that because people are going to resist," he said in a recent interview.

Nightbyrd said he had shipped more than 200 orders from his Austin warehouse. The urine is tested, then packaged in plastic bags that include a tube through which it can be poured.

"I'm really startled that anybody would pay $49.95 for urine. I have a $5 pamphlet on how to beat the tests," he said.

The urine customers are "yuppies and students going out into the job market," according to Nightbyrd.

Gara LaMarche, director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, praised the idea, predicting there will be "a flourishing black market in clean urine" as the drug tests become more widely used.

"Isn't that great?" asked LaMarche, whose group maintains that urine tests are an unconstitutional invasion of privacy.

LaMarche said the sale of clean urine could spark second thoughts about the whole testing process.

"You are either going to have a test which isn't monitored, in which case the results are useless once this kind of clean urine market gets off the ground. Or you will have tests so degrading and intrusive that most people are going to find it very distasteful."

Dr. Robert Bernstein, Texas state health commissioner, said he knew of no state law that would prohibit urine sales.

"I just don't think it comes under the food-and-drug laws. I believe we have no jurisdiction over it," he said.

He did not know whether customers who buy urine and pass it as their own would be violating any laws.

Nightbyrd, who in the 1970s published the now-defunct alternative-press newspaper Austin Sun, said he gets his product through a deal with a local Bible study group that he refused to identify.

"That has worked out very well," he said. "I can report that elderly Bible students at fundamentalist churches are quite drug-free."

Looking good

Before dieting, throw out myths

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — Much of the blame for the failure to successfully lose weight is the pervasiveness of a number of myths about dieting, according to Bobbi Mitzenmacher, who runs a weight control group at California State University, Dominguez Hills.

Mitzenmacher, a health educator and psychology instructor at the university, refutes these common misconceptions about dieting:

• Fad diets work: Short-term plans such as living on just grapefruit or bananas are not the answer. When the person goes back to his or her previous eating habits, there's a rebound effect. Then the body develops more fat cells.

• Exercise increases the appetite: Moderate exercise doesn't increase the appetite. When you decrease activity, that leads to putting on weight.

• Skipping meals will lead to weight loss: When you miss a meal, what usually happens is you're much hungrier the next time you eat and then you consume more. It seems the body operates better with food coming in regularly.

• Dieting will make you feel weak or fatigued: If you follow a sensible diet plan, your energy level will remain normal.

• Most people need to lose weight: While there are an estimated 32 million overweight Americans, many more are taken in by society's idea of what you should look like. Our country's ideal of beauty is not realistic for many people's body types, so we find many people obsessed with dieting who shouldn't be.

• You should lose weight as quickly as possible: On the contrary, slow, steady weight loss is much longer lasting.

Knowing what not to do, however, is only part of the answer for those who need to slenderize, Mitzenmacher said, noting that dieting demands an approach which takes in multiple factors, including exercise, psychological issues and nutrition.

Dieters should first consider the psychological reasons behind their obesity, she said.

Organ donors to get AIDS test

In the wake of a unique organ-donor case in which a patient developed AIDS antibodies after receiving a kidney transplant, a major national organ-procurement group has called on its members to tighten its testing standards.

Dr. William Eagles, assistant director of the Southeastern Organ Procurement Foundation in Richmond, Va., said 49 organ-transplant centers are being asked, when possible, to take a blood sample from a potential donor's body before giving blood transfusions to save his or her life.

The advisory was prompted by an unusual case in which an Augusta, Ga., man tested positive for the exposure to AIDS two months after receiving a kidney from a traffic-accident victim who carried the virus.

Plastic surgeons find faults

A survey of more than 1,400 U.S. plastic surgeons found that 22 percent of them had complications, or at least complaints, after undergoing cosmetic surgery by another plastic surgeon, Dr. I. Kelman Cohen told a recent gathering of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons in Chicago.

But when plastic surgeons fix a nose or tuck a bottom of their own family member, the complaint rate fell to 3 percent.

"That may mean we are so grandiose that we don't see our own mistakes," said Cohen, who is chairman of plastic and reconstructive surgery at the Medical College of Virginia campus of the Virginia Commonwealth University. Or, "it may mean that indeed they had more complications."

Cohen speculated that doctors either don't make very good patients because they don't want to give up control, or they actually do not get the best care because they are treated like VIPs. For example, sutures may be removed prematurely for a VIP patient because they complain, while a doctor will make a regular patient keep them in.

Nurses not such big smokers

Hospital nurses are more than twice as likely to smoke as doctors or dentists, but less likely than American women in general, Johns Hopkins University researchers report.

Of the nurses surveyed in the Johns Hopkins study, 22 percent were smokers, 23 percent were former smokers and 55 percent had never smoked. About 10 percent of American doctors and dentists smoke, as do 29 percent of American women.

The nurses were compared with American women in general because 95 percent of the nurses in the Hopkins survey were women. Most previous studies had concluded that the rate of smoking among nurses was higher than that among women as a whole.

The new study, in the American Journal of Public Health, was based on questionnaires sent to 1,719 full- and part-time nurses employed by Johns Hopkins as of November 1984. The 1,380 respondents averaged 33 years old.

Dental work safe after attack

Contrary to popular belief, it's safe to have dental work after a heart attack, doctors report. The University of South Florida physicians treated 40 recent heart-attack patients, using local anesthesia, with no ill effects.

Viva la difference to keep love alive

Jo Ann Larsen

The relationship starts out with bells ringing and birds singing. Two people, dazzled by the glow of romance, idealize the image of the other, each convinced the other is a perfect mate.

But soon the bells and birds grow quiet. Now there are only the discordant noises of two unhappy people:

Says she: "He's so messy. I don't know why it's so hard for him to pick up after himself. He leaves everything he uses lying around. It just infuriates me."

Says he: "I can't believe how meticulous she is. And how impatient. I'd pick up my things if she would just wait but I can't even put something down without her whisking it off to some cupboard or drawer. Then she just freaks out and complains and complains about how terrible I am for not putting my clothes away. She gets downright nasty."

The romance has faded. Two disillusioned people, now seeing only the faults and flaws, deal with their very real differences — destructively.

If you, like these poor disenchanted people, find yourself making harsh sounds because your mate didn't turn out the way you expected, take heed. There are other — much more positive ways — of dealing with differences that will tend to make you feel much more content with your mate and your marriage. Here are some possibilities.

ACCEPT YOUR MATE'S RIGHT TO BE DIFFERENT. Before dealing effectively with differences, you each must first acknowledge the other's right to his view of the world.

Everyone has the right to be himself, the person he is, the sum total of his feelings, thoughts, behaviors, tastes, dislikes, opinions and perceptions — married or not.

So maybe at this point you're grimacing and asking yourself, "Does this mean I have to ignore or put up with my mate's bad habits or annoying behavior?" The answer is no, but it does mean that you may need to deal differently with the differences.

Quit demanding. It is a misconception to believe you have the right to insist that your mate do what you want just because you want it. As one author astutely observed, "In intimate relating, nobody owes anybody anything." On the basis of your own willingness and desire to give, you must decide when, how and in what ways you are willing to respond to another person. And so must your mate.

While you don't have the right to demand, you have the right to invite.

Invitations can come in several forms:

- Simple requests: "Would you be willing to change your behavior? It would help me. I would be more comfortable."
- Negotiating or problem-solving: "I have a problem with (something you're doing) (something in the relationship). Would you be willing to work with me on a solution that would fit for both of us? As we work on this problem, I will try to look hard at my own behavior and to be open to making changes that will help you."
- Trading: "Are you interested in a deal? There's something I'd like you to change and I would be willing to trade you for something you'd like me to change."
- Positive feedback: "I really like what you're doing right now. I'd enjoy it if you'd act that way even more often."

AVOID CONTROL TRAPS. Mates have a tendency to operate from the position that "my way is the only right way" and to coerce the other into conforming to this absolute standard. Essentially, the message is: "Do what I want or I will (hate you) (leave you) (punish you) (judge you) (ignore you)."

To de-control your relationship, you may want to try these strategies:

- Use opinion language. Instead of taking the position "You're wrong!" or "That's not true!," take the position that "My vantage point is different. Here's how I see the situation through my lenses." Stress that you realize your opinion is just that — an opinion — and that your mate is entitled to see the world through his own lenses.
- Give up threats, orders, blaming, criticism, sarcasm, judging, name-calling, and any other form of communication that functions to pressure your mate to fall into line. Responses like these give out the message, "If you don't do what I want, then you will incur my wrath."
- Give up labeling your mate — you're (insensitive) (disorganized) (talkative) (practical) (flighty) (selfish) (stupid) (indecisive) (etc.).

As 1 author astutely observed, 'In intimate relating, nobody owes anybody anything.'

Labels emanate from your own internal measuring standard by which you judge your mate's behavior. If your mate doesn't conform to your ideas of how a person "ought" to behave, then you may judge that person to be (inadequate) (bad) (sick) (dumb). It is though somewhere there is a "Book of Truth" to back up your ideas about what constitutes "insensitivity," "disorganization," "selfishness," and the like.

- Manage your anger. Remember that if you typically become angry because you don't like your mate's behavior, you are the one manufacturing the anger, not your mate. And you are the one in charge of dealing with the differences in a more appropriate way. When you use anger to show your displeasure with differences, you're demanding, not inviting, changes from your partner.

Hospital installs mammogram unit in separate facility

By TERESA Z. TAYLOR
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — St. Benedict's Family Medical Center recently installed mammography equipment, a Technomed.

The machine is specially designed to produce a sharp, clear x-ray of breast tissue at a radiation level significantly below that of a typical x-ray machine.

Tammy Roberts, a registered radiology technologist, said the machine can detect changes in breast tissue that a physical exam will not reveal.

Although many women who come for a mammogram have been sent to the facility by their physicians to aid in diagnosing a potential problem, Roberts said a baseline mammogram is recommended for women aged 35-40, to provide a basis for comparison later, if needed.

Women ages 40-49 should have a mammogram every one to two years, with one being done yearly after the age of 50.

Nursing Director Ingrid Hudspeth said the Technomed is located in a facility separate from the rest of the hospital's x-ray equipment. Hudspeth said this was done to minimize the fear some women feel during the procedure.

"The staff is all women, also," she said, and added that the rooms were designed to be attractive rather than clinical to make patients feel more comfortable.

While a mammogram is utilized by physicians to aid in diagnosing possible breast cancer or other abnormalities of breast tissue, Dr. Jim Lohmann, a family physician on the hospital staff, stressed the value of the procedure as a preventive medicine measure.

"At birth, the probability of a woman getting breast cancer is 3.6 percent," Lohmann said, "with the odds rising when one considers a woman's family history, environment, or even geographical location."

While it is well-known that smoking plays a significant role in a woman's chances of getting the disease, there is mounting evidence that a high-fat diet plays a part too, he said. Breast cancer is more prevalent in this country than in Japan, where the people traditionally eat a low-fat diet, he said.

Lohmann said in a 1984 study done in Sweden, physicians performed a periodic mammogram on 134,867 women aged 40-74 years. The study, which was started in 1977, showed a 31 percent reduction in mortality from breast cancer.

Hudspeth stressed women should perform monthly self-exams and report any change to their physicians, but emphasized the potential importance of the mammogram.

Diabetes

not race or nationality, account for, say, the apparently higher rate of diabetes among Jewish people, concentrated, as most are, in cities. And in the cities of the North, diabetes is just as frequent among blacks as among whites.

Changing cultural and economic factors have their effect upon diet and stress patterns and thus also influenced the incidence of diabetes. This can be seen among the Yemenite Jews now in Israel. These people had a relatively low rate of diabetes when they came as new settlers. After two decades, having acquired a Western lifestyle and diet, their incidence of adult diabetes has risen to about 75 percent of the rate seen in Jews of European origin, and the rate of juvenile diabetes has doubled.

Among Americans blacks, the incidence of diabetes is also higher than among whites, matching their high rate of hypertension. This incidence is apparently higher than among African blacks. Thus, in addition to hereditary factors, many environmental factors — a number still unrecognized — must certainly be involved.

Actually, diabetes is virtually universal. After the Pima and Papago Indians of the southwest United States, the East Indians of Natal have the highest rate, with 42 percent of all adults being diabetic. With one exception, all peoples on earth are vulnerable to diabetes. The sole exception are the Eskimos, who seem to lack the chromosomes for both diabetes and asthma, making both of these diseases extremely rare among them. This would appear to underline the importance of the genetic factor in the evolution of diabetes.

OBESITY AND DIABETES

Obese people are more susceptible to diabetes than those of normal weight. Where food intake is greater than the metabolic need, the possibility of diabetes increases. This is true regardless of race, nationality, geography, or whether one lives in the city or the country.

Actually, the type of food is not as important as the amount eaten. Vegetarians get diabetes, people with as varied diets as Japanese, Arabs and New Englanders get diabetes. Any diet, if it results in weight gain and obesity, will be diabetes-inducing. Any diet which reduces weight will tend to either diminish the likelihood of diabetes or make it less severe. However, crash or fad diets should be avoided unless under the supervision of the physician.

HEREDITY AND DIABETES

If obesity is the most common precipitating factor in diabetes, heredity is the most important predisposing factor. Where genetic susceptibility is present, any of the stresses — obesity, disease, pregnancy, steroids, high-carbohydrate diet, and so on — may induce diabetes. If there is no genetic susceptibility diabetes is unlikely.

The influence of heredity is often a very elusive element. A diabetic may prove to a doctor that neither parents, grandparents, nor great-grandparents had diabetes. This still would not eliminate the possibility of a hereditary predisposition. Many people who are latent diabetics may die from other causes before the disease develops. Children of these people may be predisposed to diabetes although their parents would seem to have been nondiabetic.

Recent studies with identical twins have shed interesting new light on the question of heredity in diabetes. In non-insulin-dependent diabetes (Type II), concordance between the twins was nearly 100 percent. However, in insulin-dependent diabetes (Type I), only about 50 percent of the twins both developed diabetes. These findings would indicate that there are genetic differences in the two forms of the disease, and that other factors such as stress and infection have an effect along with hereditary susceptibility.

Supplemental flu shot suggested for some

ATLANTA (AP) — Outbreaks of influenza-type illness a U.S. military bases in Florida and in Asia emphasize that a supplemental vaccine should be given to certain high-risk individuals, particularly young adults, federal health officials said.

Influenza-like activity was reported this spring at three U.S. Air Force bases in the Philippines and Japan, and in October and November at the Key West Naval Base in Florida, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control reported.

In several of the cases, evidence of ATaiwan86-like virus was detected, the CDC said.

That virus is not among the three strains included in the standard 1986 flu vaccine, which was developed early in the year, said CDC epidimiologist Nancy Arden.

She said that at the time this year's standard vaccine was developed, incidence of ATaiwan86 was considered low. However, the strain was reported becoming more common in the Far East by mid-year.

Ms. Arden said that there has been some confusion regarding ATaiwan86 since its emergence. She said the supplemental vaccine for that strain is not recommended for the general public.

"The perception of many people is that ATaiwan86 is an unusually virulent strain," she said. "And it is not."

But because some people under age 35 are more susceptible, the supplemental vaccine should be given to those considered to be at high risk, she said.

The influenza outbreak in Key West, in which 52 active duty personnel reported symptoms, was the first in the United States for the 1986-87 flu season, the CDC said. Subsequent outbreaks have been reported in Massachusetts and New York City.

In the Massachusetts outbreak, the CDC said, Influenza type A (H1N1) virus was isolated in two college students in mid-November. Several other students at the time reported flu-like symptoms.

Diplomats to undergo testing for AIDS

State Department won't hire job applicants whose results show exposure to the virus

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department will begin screening foreign service employees and their families for exposure to the AIDS virus, in a plan prompted by worries over emergency blood stocks for diplomats overseas.

Under the program approved in late September by Secretary of State George Shultz, job applicants also will be tested and will not be hired if results show they have been exposed to the AIDS virus, said Dr. Paul A. Goff, State Department deputy medical director.

By Jan. 1, screening will begin for about 20,000 employees and their dependents, Goff said.

Employees of the foreign service and 38 other agencies, including the U.S. Information Agency and the Agency for International Development, will be severely limited from service abroad if tests show they were exposed to the AIDS virus, he said.

The department has offered AIDS tests to employees on a voluntary basis for about 18 months, Goff said. He listed three reasons why the screening is now mandatory.

First, he said, in countries where blood banks are not up to U.S. standards, the department relies on its own employees to donate blood for other employees, and wants to be sure the blood has no possibility of AIDS contamination.

"We probably more actively use our own blood supply than even the military because we don't have hospitals out in the field," he said.

Second, many overseas posts lack adequate medical facilities to detect and treat AIDS, Goff said.

"Admittedly, with people who have this viral infection, there's not much you can do, but I think it's pretty well established that early diagnosis and treatment will help them survive longer," he said.

Third, testing is "cost effective," he said. It will cost $70,000 to $80,000 a year, compared with the $40,000 to $150,000 cost of caring for an AIDS patient.

"We have a real responsibility for people overseas, not only to provide care but to pay for it, much more so than does a domestic agency," he said. "From the patient's standpoint and our standpoint this is a prudent thing to do."

Employees and dependents 18 years and older showing positive results would be restricted to the United States if they also show signs of a faltering immune system, he said. AIDS, an incurable condition, results in the destruction of the body's infection-fighting immune system.

Those with no symptoms of acquired immune deficiency syndrome will be permitted to serve in countries with medical facilities and experience in treating the disease, Goff said.

The tests will be conducted in the United States as part of routine physical examinations administered to employees and dependents returning home between foreign assignments, Goff said, adding that all overseas personnel will be tested within the next three to four years.

"The program includes full counseling of people who test positive. This is not a problem where we're calling for the firing of people and we're not calling for testing of people domestically," Goff said in a telephone interview.

The military began an AIDS screening program last year. So far about 1,500 servicemen and women of 1 million tested have showed exposure to the virus. The State Department program would be the first by a civilian agency.

AIDS had been diagnosed in 26,566 Americans as of mid-October, 14,977 of whom have died. An estimated 1.5 million Americans have been infected by the virus, according to the surgeon general.

So far the disease has been confined largely to male homosexuals, intravenous drug users and people who received tainted blood transfusions.

Goff could not say how many people have been tested in the State Department's voluntary program, but said a handful — fewer than 20 — have exhibited symptoms of AIDS.

The testing program was not publicly announced, Goff said, but "it hasn't been secretive. We've sent cables to all posts within the last 10 days asking that all employees be informed."

Scientists: Aspirin emerging as 'wonder drug'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Aspirin, known mostly as a pain killer, is emerging as a promising drug that potentially could help with problems in pregnancy and disease defense, researchers said Tuesday.

Scientists said aspirin, used for decades to relieve headaches and cold symptoms, is emerging as a drug with many more uses than previously believed.

Speaking at a symposium at the George Washington University Medical Center, researchers said aspirin is increasingly being used in new clinical trials to see if it can help in treating diseases such as AIDS and cancer, as well as preventing some problems with pregnancy.

Dr. Allan L. Goldstein, chairman of biochemistry at the center and moderator of the program, said aspirin is emerging as a new "wonder drug" with many applications.

"Perhaps one of the most exciting new frontiers for clinical applications of aspirin is in the field of immunology," Goldstein said.

"These findings have wide-ranging implications for many immunological disorders and diseases in which immune response is a factor," including cancer, AIDS and perhaps the common cold, he said.

Dr. Judith Hsia, who works with Goldstein, said both aspirin and a protein called thymosin stimulate white blood cell production of gamma interferon and interleukin-2, two promising substances that boost the disease-fighting immune system.

Preliminary human trials confirm test-tube results that the equivalent of one to two aspirin tablets daily can triple interferon production and double interleukin output, she said.

Goldstein said that in laboratory tests, thymosin and aspirin used together have an additive effect that spurs production of the two immune modulators more than either given separately. However, these results have yet to be confirmed in humans, he added.

"If these studies with normal human volunteers are promising, we will focus on starting human trials to see if this approach works against disease," Goldstein said.

Ultrasound detects tiny prostate tumors

CHICAGO (AP) — Ultrasound can detect prostate cancers too small to be found with traditional methods and could become a routine screening tool for the disease that kills 25,000 men in the United States each year, a researcher said Thursday.

Doctors screening male patients over age 60 at St. Joseph Mercy Hospital in Ann Arbor, Mich., found nearly twice as many suspected prostate tumors using ultrasound as they did using the traditional screening method, Dr. Richard McLeary said.

McLeary said the screenings of 388 men were part of an ongoing project comparing ultrasound with the traditional method of probing with a finger for nodular enlargement of the prostate gland during a rectal examination.

"The problem with the digital exam is that by the time someone feels something, it's often too big to be cured," he said in a telephone interview.

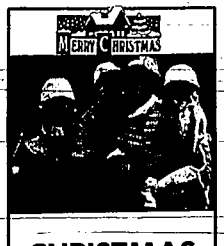

Ultrasound generates an image by beaming sound waves at portions of the body, then capturing and depicting the reflected waves.

Doctors using ultrasound to screen the men detected six cancerous tumors that were not found using traditional methods, McLeary said.

A total of 13 cases of prostate cancer were found in the tests, with seven detected by conventional means, he said.

Dr. Fred Lee, who headed the project, said ultrasonic screening detected tumors as small as half a centimeter in diameter.

Israel walking diplomatic tightrope over Austria policy

By DAN IZENBERG
The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Six months after Kurt Waldheim's election as president of Austria, Israel is still trying to shape a policy toward Vienna that will reconcile a collective memory of Nazi horrors with the dictates of modern diplomacy.

Waldheim has been accused of covering up a Nazi past as a German officer during World War II and of involvement in the deportation of thousands of Yugoslav partisans while serving in the Balkans.

His election in June was condemned by Israeli leaders, who summoned Ambassador Michael Elitzur home for consultations.

Israel then downgraded its diplomatic representation in Vienna by appointing a charge d'affaires to replace Elitzur, who was scheduled to retire.

Israel took the step in August but waited three months to make an official announcement. Then, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres simply told Parliament: "We have decided to make do with a lower level of representation."

No official explanation was given and Parliament did not debate the decision. A senior Foreign Ministry official refused to be interviewed because of what a spokesman described as the sensitivity of the matter.

Austria called back its ambassador last month for consultations after several requests went unanswered for clarifications regarding Israel's plans for diplomatic representation in Austria. The ambassador has not returned, although his family remained in Israel.

"Even the government has never really resolved the Waldheim question or decided what to do about it," Elitzur told The Associated Press in an interview. He said he strongly recommended returning an ambassador to Vienna and accused the government of bowing to public opinion on the issue.

But government leaders have been stymied by the need to balance the conflicting demands of Israel's past and its future.

On the one hand, Israelis consider their country a monument to the 6 million Jews slain in Hitler's Europe. They feel bound to perpetuate the memory of the carnage and punish those responsible.

"It doesn't matter whether he (Waldheim) was big or small-fry Nazi," Labor Party legislator Shevach Weiss, a Holocaust survivor, said. "All proportions change because of what the man now represents. We shouldn't send an ambassador to Austria."

On the other hand, Israel believes it must fight to survive and develop in a hostile Arab world. In this battle, it needs good relations with as many countries as possible.

"Proper diplomatic relations are a moral imperative because otherwise international life would collapse, and that is an immorality of the first order," Elitzur said.

Pre-World War II Vienna was one of the greatest centers of Jewish life in Europe, as well as a hotbed of anti-Semitism. The city's 200,000-strong Jewish community was wiped out by the Nazis after the merger of Germany and Austria in 1938.

Israel and the newly independent Austria established diplomatic ties soon after Israel's independence in 1948. But relations became strained during the 1970s when Social Democratic Party leader Bruno Kreisky, a Jew by birth and a harsh critic of Israel, was Austria's chancellor.

Nevertheless, Austria has provided invaluable services to Israel.

It has mediated with Israel's hostile Arab neighbors, helping to arrange a prisoner exchange with the Syrian-backed Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command in May 1985. Israel released 1,150 Palestinian prisoners in return for three Israelis captured during the 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

Since the early 1970s, it has been the transit point for hundreds of thousands of Soviet Jews allowed to emigrate but not permitted by the Kremlin to go directly to Israel.

Peres has tried to calm fears the current crisis could affect these arrangements. "I cannot imagine the Austrian government would revoke the transit rights of Soviet Jews immigrating to Israel," he told Parliament.

Despite Israel's recognition by the United Nations, it remains one of the most diplomatically isolated countries in the world. Only 41 countries have ambassadors in Israel. Every Eastern bloc country except Romania has severed ties with Israel and all Arab countries except Egypt refuse to recognize it.

Thirty-eight years after independence, Israel is still fighting for international legitimacy. Israeli officials feel that downgrading ties with Austria will not help win that battle.

Pointing to the problem, President Chaim Herzog urged the government in a speech shortly after Waldheim's election to avoid acting hastily. The government, he said, must "decide what is good for the nation of Israel, for the government of Israel and what is good for Soviet Jewry."

Waldheim trying to cope with Nazi past

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Kurt Waldheim is still struggling to emerge from the shadows of his Nazi past and has played little public role in his six months as president of Austria.

A recent public opinion poll shows that even some of the people who supported him in the June election are unhappy with him as president.

The presidency is largely a ceremonial post, but Waldheim has stayed out of the limelight and has not planned any trips abroad. In the United States, for example, there have been appeals to the attorney general that Waldheim be barred from entering the country because he is accused of trying to hide a Nazi past as a German army officer in World War II.

Waldheim has denied any wrongdoing during his army service and said none of the allegations against him are valid.

Waldhim has refused to grant an interview to The Associated Press. But his spokesman, Gerold Christian, dismissed any suggestion that Waldheim is largely isolated. He said Waldheim was living up to his promise to be "an active president."

On Wednesday, Chancellor Franz Vranitzky urged Austrians to acknowledge their country's Nazi past and to accept their share of the guilt and responsibility. He spoke at a world congress of war veterans, resistance fighters and war victims.

When Vienna's mayor held a reception for participants, Waldheim did not attend.

Waldheim also was notably absent from November's opening ceremony for the 35-nation conference on security in Europe. Most of the ministers who attended did not call on Waldheim, as would have been considered normal.

Waldheim's predecessor, Rudolf Kirchschlaeger, attended the ceremony and chatted with diplomats and reporters.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz refused to meet with Waldheim, but Waldheim did see the foreign ministers of the Soviet Union, West Germany, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Italy, Switzerland, Finland and Cyprus.

Since Waldheim's election Israel has recalled its ambassador and downgraded relations.

Asked if Waldheim had received invitations for state visits, Christian said, "The president made clear at a news conference on June 10 that he does not plan foreign visits in the first year in office."

Fighting flares up in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Mortar and tank shells and rocket-propelled grenades exploded around Beirut's embattled refugee camps Sunday after Shiite Moslem militiamen rejected a cease-fire plan agreed to by Palestinian factions.

A Palestinian official in Damascus, Syria, had announced that various Palestinian guerrilla groups agreed to a cease-fire in their battle with the Lebanese Shiites.

Khaled Abdel-Majid of the Palestine National Salvation Front said the new truce accord included Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement, which had not been a party to a previous unsuccessful truce. The participation of Fatah, the largest guerrilla group in the Palestine Liberation Organization, was considered crucial to halting two weeks of bitter fighting that has killed at least 431 people and wounded 936.

But Nabih Berri, Shiite Amal militia leader and Lebanon's justice minister, rejected the Palestinian-proposed truce in a statement issued in the Syrian capital.

Amal insists that its fighters reoccupy all positions the Palestinians seized from them Nov. 24 in the hills around the south Lebanese town of Maghdousheh. The positions overlook the port city of Sidon, where the Palestinians have refugee camps.

The Palestinian truce plan provided for handing over the highlands to neutral "Lebanese and Islamic militias."

"As for national and Islamic forces taking over Amal positions, this is rejected and no force can replace Amal in these positions. This is fundamental," Berri said.

He said Amal agreed to other provisions, including ending the siege of Palestinians camps in Beirut and southern Lebanon once the Palestinians withdraw from Maghdousheh.

Sunday's fighting flared around Beirut's Chatilla and Bourj el-Barajneh Palestinian refugee camps. There were also reports of fresh fighting around Maghdousheh.

Iran missiles strike Iraq

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said it fired three missiles into the southern Iraqi city of Basra and bombed five other targets Sunday. Iraq later reported 16 civilians were killed and 38 wounded in the attacks.

Iraq said its planes flew 111 missions Sunday against Iranian troop concentrations behind the front, "inflicting considerable losses in men and equipment." Iran claimed one plane was shot down over Eslamabad-e Gharb in northern Iran, but Iraq denied it.

Iraq also said it attacked a tanker off Iran.

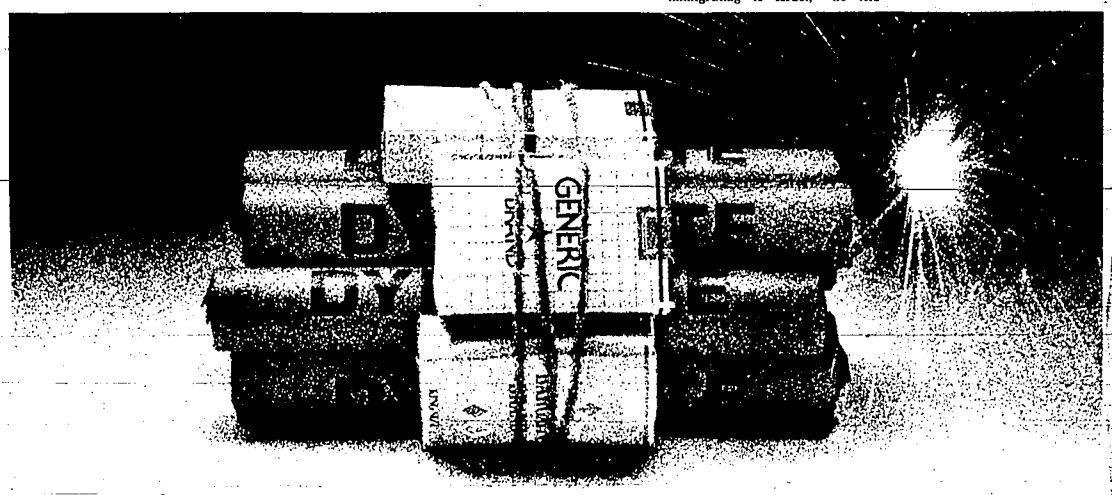

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said three short-range missiles damaged "military and economic targets" in Basra, Iraq's second-largest city with 330,000 people. IRNA said parts of Basra were engulfed in flames.

IRNA said the missiles were launched as part of an artillery bombardment of Basra and "economic centers and military fortification" along the front.

The agency said the shelling began at 8 p.m. Saturday and was to last 48 hours, to retaliate for Iraqi air raids Saturday in which 114 people died.

TWIN FALLS — The tourist industry, increased summer business and national trends could all be reasons for Blaine County's population growth rate of 31.2 percent since 1980, say area mayors.

Idaho's population, according to the recently published Idaho Vital Statistics, grew by 6.4 percent from 1980 through 1985, and now stands at 1,005,000.

Idaho was the 16th fastest-growing state in the nation from 1980 through 1984.

The fastest-growing counties during that time period were Custer and Blaine. Custer County had a growth rate of 53.2 percent, with an estimated 1985 population of 5,200. Blaine came in second, with a rate of 31.2 percent and a population of 12,900.

Hailey Mayor Paschal Drake said the tourist industry's extended season and increased summer business were probably the reasons for the county's high growth rate.

"Airport traffic, as well as convention tourism, broke records this year. All businesses in this area are affected because all are directly or indirectly involved in tourism," he told The Times-News.

He added, though, that the connection between increased population and increased tourism has not been obvious. "The business growth must not be that visible," he said.

An example of the increase in population is the availability of housing, he said. "It used to be that a newcomer (to Hailey) wouldn't have any trouble finding a place to live. Now, they're having trouble finding housing," he said.

Hailey's population climbed from 2,109 in 1980 to 2,856 in 1984. Population figures for individual cities in 1985 have not yet been finalized.

Ketchum Mayor Jerry Seiffert said that the attractiveness of the area as a place for a second home is probably the reason for the growth rate.

"People build second homes here and declare Idaho as their primary residence, amd then spend anywhere from three to six months a year actually living here," he said.

"The area has created a second-home environment, and that's an environment people want to live in," he added.

The community is also young, and the average resident stays a short time in the area, Seiffert said.

"The same people may not be here two years from now," he said.

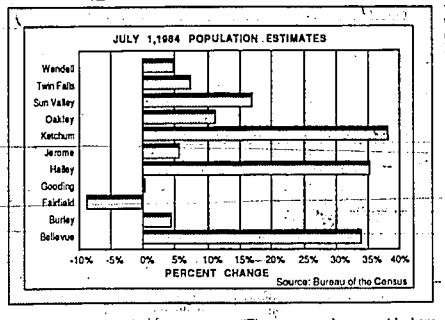

Ketchum's population increased from 2,200 in 1980 to 3,041 in 1984.

Sun Valley Mayor Ruth Lieder saw the county's growth as the result of a national trend.

"People have found themselves in a position where they can move to rural communities and, because of high technology communications and transportation, they can still lead financially active lifestyles in a healthy environment," she said.

The atmosphere of the community is similar to that described by Seiffert, she said. "This is not a retirement community. I'm overwhelmed by the number of young people. We're loaded with young couples and their kids," she said.

Sun Valley, primarily a community of condominiums and costly second homes, showed an increase in population of 17.1 percent, going from 545 in 1980 to 638 in 1984.

Twelve counties lost population. Camas County had the highest rate of loss — 16.5 percent, going in population from 818 to 700.

Other Magic Valley counties' growth or decline rates were: Cassia — 6.7 percent (20,700), Camas — Gooding — 3.8 percent (12,300), Jerome — 4.8 percent (15,600), Lincoln — -0.1 percent (3,400), Minidoka — 7.7 percent (21,200), and Twin Falls — 5.9 percent (56,100).

Vital statistics other than population include events like births, deaths, marriages and divorces. Idaho trends in these areas show a decrease in all four categories.

Provisional estimates for 1985 show that there were 17,539 live births in Idaho — 8,975 boys and 8,564 girls. This means a rate of 17.5, the lowest level ever recorded. Even though population has grown, the number of births has declined to its lowest point since 1976.

The provisional estimate for deaths in Idaho in 1985 is 7,105, a rate of 7.1. This number of deaths represents 3,893 males and 3,212 females and shows a decrease of 2 percent.

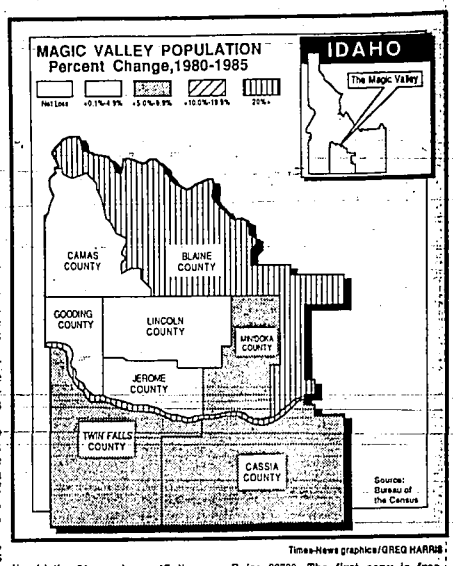

The number and rate of Idaho marriages declined from 13,264 (a rate of 13.3) in 1984 to 12,277 (a rate of 12.2, provisional) in 1985, which marks the fourth consecutive year of a decline. The rate of marriage, 12.2, is at its lowest point in decades, statistics show.

After 16 years of annual increases, the number of divorces in Idaho has decreased for four straight years. In 1985, 6,207 divorces were granted, an increase of 3 over 1984. The provisional divorce rate for 1985 was 6.2 percent and remained unchanged from 1984, which was the lowest rate since 1974.

Statistics show that each day in Idaho, there are approximately 48 live births, 34 marriages, 17 divorces and annulments, and 19 deaths, which include one prenatal death, seven heart disease deaths, four cancer deaths, and one accidental death.

A copy of the 1985 Idaho Vital Statistics may be received by writing to Vital Statistics, Statehouse, Boise 83720. The first copy is free, but the second will cost $6.50 plus tax.

The book goes into greater detail about population, birth, death, marriage and divorce statistics and includes recipes for fruits, vegetables, dairy, beef, lamb, potatoes, poultry, fish and wild game.

BLM to escalate farm trespass fight

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — Magic Valley farmers who have plowed or fenced public land soon may be losing part of the property they have worked for decades.

Especially susceptible to agricultural trespass, the Shoshone District of the U.S. Bureau of Land Management is one of two pilot districts in the country designing an aggressive enforcement thrust aimed at reclaiming the public property. The other district is based at Prineville, Ore.

A federal audit released late last month severely criticized the BLM for lax enforcement of farm trespass rules. Farmers have dodged BLM fees, causing taxpayers to pay at least $1 million in lost revenues and enriching themselves with government price support payments for crops sown on public lands, according to the report by the Office of Inspector General for the Interior Department, which runs BLM.

"Potentially significant lease and permit revenues have been lost and unauthorizesd use of public land has not been discouraged," the audit was quoted in national press reports.

To date, searching out farm trespass has taken a back seat to many other priorities, Idaho BLM officials said. There has been no active hunt.

"We haven't had a policy of actually going out and looking for agricultural trespass," said Shoshone District Director Jon Idso. "There are other problems out on the public lands that need attention. It's really a question of priorities."

Instead, BLM field agents have checked property lines while performing other duties.

However, that passive approach may be beefed up as a result of the audit, and the change most likely will come to Shoshone District quicker than to the rest of the country.

"We will be putting more emphasis on identification of trespass problem areas and trying to get a better idea of what the problem is in the district," said Harold Brown, staff realty specialist.

Shoshone District may have been selected because it has taken some steps in the past decade to secure its land and because it has many common boundaries with private land.

The district has records of 173 farm trespasses in the past 11 years, as far as its lists extend. It has collected damages of $148,732 so far, and 42 cases covering an estimated 300 to 400 acres still are open. They generally are small.

"Over 90 percent of the trespasses are less than 10 acres and most of them are under five acres," Brown said.

They also are generally longstanding. "Many of these fences or trespasses have occurred for 50 or 60 years," Brown said. When irrigation systems were built, many farmers or ranchers assumed they had rights as far as the canal ditch. However, the canals follow the contours of the land, not public property lines.

"We just had a situation where a guy followed (a water line) . . . the water right went back to 1888. I imagine it has been fenced along that ditch line since it (the right) began," he said.

The farmer is confused by missing survey markers on the land itself or other poor markings, he said. At the same time, farmers often have not tried too hard to find their boundaries. "In almost 100 percent of the cases, they are aware that they are not totally on their land, but in most cases they are not sure where the boundary is," Brown said.

Often, aerial photos done for BLM projects reveal the trespasses. While most are not strictly "wilful," some have been as large as 160 acres in the Shoshone District, Brown said.

In the Burley District, which has a "fairly significant problem," a few range as high as 200 or 300 acres, Realty Specialist Sharon LaBrecque said.

When trespasses are discovered, the BLM first tries to reclaim the land. Then, depending on circumstances, "We'll normally try to pick up what we call 'trespass fees,'

Doctors optimistic arm reattachment is successful

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

RUPERT — There's a long period of treatment and recovery facing a Minidoka County boy who lost his right arm in a farm accident a week ago, but doctors and family members are optimistic over chances that surgery to reattach the arm has succeeded.

Minidoka County Sheriff Ray Jarvis, whose department investigated the accident, said Friday he has learned from family members that doctors at the LDS Hospital in Salt Lake City have apparently successfully reattached the arm that was severed just above the elbow.

Scott Allen Snow, 12, son of Russell and Karen Beasley of Rupert, was injured Nov. 28 when he slipped and fell into a power take-off on a tractor at the dairy farm of his father and grandfather.

Sheriff Jarvis said the boy was helping his father, who was filling a vacuum tank that siphons manure from the dairy corrals.

The boy was watching to make sure the tank didn't overflow. As he stepped over the power take-off and onto the yoke attaching the tank to the stationary tractor that powers the operation, the power unit caught

Area GOP welcomes Boyd as Speaker

By JANE ROBISON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Idaho's new Speaker of the House may not live in Southern Idaho, breaking the area's 28-year hold on the job, but Tom Boyd's roots are buried deep in the Magic Valley, and area Republicans could not be more delighted with his selection.

The Genesee Republican has a reputation as a gentleman farmer with an ability to get things done.

"He's adept in relations with other people," said Jeff Stoker, a former Twin Falls representative. "He's a pretty level-headed guy who is quite supportive of education."

Former Speaker William Lanting expressed similar thoughts. "Boyd is more moderate, and I think it will be better," he said. "I think he and Andrus will work well together."

Boyd, a six-term veteran, won a three-way race for the Speaker's job on Thursday. He held on to beat Rep. John Sessions, R-Driggs, and Rep. Robert Geddes, R-Preston. Boyd replaces House Speaker T.W. Stivers, R-Twin Falls, who retired this year.

During a Saturday phone interview, Boyd was still reeling from the surprise victory.

"Governor-elect Andrus called me up Friday and said, 'You're going to have a hectic day.' And Bill Lanting called me up and said, 'You're going to have a hectic day.' And they were right," the 58-year-old Boyd said. "I still can't believe it."

Boyd began campaigning for the Speaker's post in May, traveling more than 13,000 miles to meet with lawmakers and Republicans. He enlisted the early support of two Magic Valley lawmakers — Doug Jones of Filer and Gary Robbins of Dietrich. He acknowledged their support on Saturday.

"I had to have support, we only have six Republicans in northern Payette," he said. "Doug was instrumental, and so was Gary. Both were on my team from the beginning," he said. "That's risky business, and you've got to be appreciative."

But that appreciation did not show up in committee assignments. Robbins expressed an interest in moving from Revenue and Taxation Committee to Appropriations, and Jones wanted on Revenue and Taxation, but neither received his first wish.

"I said during my race that I wasn't going to go back and purge people, and they understood that," Boyd said Saturday. "I decided to stay with seniority, and let the chips fall where they may."

Boyd said he thinks the committees are balanced, not loaded on the side of moderates or conservatives.

Boyd is viewed as a moderate, with a strong commitment to education, Stoker said.

"I think the main thing you're going to see is in leadership style," Stoker said. "And he's oriented to education, especially higher educ

Hospital transfer vote set Tuesday

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls County voters will be asked Tuesday whether they support the idea of Magic Valley Regional Medical Center changing from county ownership to that of a non-profit corporation.

The election will be an advisory vote, directing the county commissioners on the issue. Although it is not binding, the commissioners have said they will abide by the vote.

Commissioner Judy Felton said the polls will be open between noon and 8 p.m. at each of the county's 20 polling places. She said the only exception is the site at the Judicial Annex, which will move across the walkway to the Courthouse.

Polling machines from November's general election will be unavailable because they still contain results from that election in case a recount is called, Felton said. But there will be one machine at each polling place, she said.

"You may just have to wait a little longer," Felton said.

UI officials set town meeting

By BART JANSEN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Representatives of the University of Idaho in Moscow will hold a town meeting Tuesday in Twin Falls to enable people to learn more about the school and what it offers.

"We are not just the university of north Idaho," said Larry Branen, dean of the school of agriculture. "The purpose is to serve the total populace of the state of Idaho."

Twin Falls will follow a dozen stops university officials recently made around the state to speak about the land-grant school. The meeting will be at O'Leary Junior High School at 7:30 p.m.

College of Engineering Dean William Saul and Terry Armstrong, executive assistant to the UI president, will also speak in Twin Falls.

The 10-minute talks from each person illustrate different programs offered at the school.

Branen said he will discuss new opportunities in agriculture, including "the international aspects of our business."

Greater crop-production efficiency and better marketing of agricultural products will also be discussed, Branen said.

"What we're trying to do is bolster economic underpinnings of the state of Idaho," Armstrong said. Because of the importance of farming to Idaho and Magic Valley, the topic was highlighted to accompany technological areas at the university such as engineering, he said.

"I will describe programs and services we have," said Armstrong, who added that Magic Valley enrollment trends at the U of I would also be discussed.

Both officials emphasized the meeting is a chance for people to learn more about the university by asking questions after the short speeches.

HANSEN — Ann VanAlstyne of Van Nuys, Calif., was still listed in critical condition Sunday night at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise after sustaining head injuries from a small plane crash near Hansen Saturday.

Her husband, Paul VanAlstyne, who is listed in fair condition at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls, was the pilot of the white 1981 Cessna 414 that crashed into a grain field five miles south of Hansen.

Both Paul and Ann VanAlstyne were found strapped in their seats, conscious and suffering head injuries. The third passenger, their seven-year-old son, Kevin, suffered no injuries.

Gary Gomes, a crash investigator for the Federal Aviation Administration in Salt Lake City, reported to the scene Sunday to inspect the crash site.

The plane was approaching the Twin Falls-Sun Valley airport for an instrument landing but little else was known about the plane's flight plan or the cause of the accident.

The plane glanced off the ground at least once and slid into the field, losing a wing, propellers and one engine, officials said. It slammed down about 11 miles east of the airport.

Oakley man gets Rhodes honor

CALDWELL (AP) — Michael Woodhouse, an English student at the College of Idaho in Caldwell, has been chosen as one of 32 American Rhodes Scholars for 1987.

The senior from Oakley was among four students selected for the scholarships from the Northwest on Sunday. Rhodes Scholarships provide tuition, room, board and transportation for two years of study at Oxford University in England.

Woodhouse was picked earlier as one of two regional finalists from Idaho out of eight top Idaho college and university students vying for the honor. Idaho's region includes Alaska, Wyoming, Washington, Oregon, Montana and North Dakota.

Woodhouse currently is student body president at the College of Idaho, where he is active in the Judo Club, Intercollegiate Knights and the Writer's Club.

The last time a Rhodes Scholar was named from the College of Idaho was 1969, but students from the small, private school have been represented in the regional finals every year since 1983.

Prison quiet following rampage

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho State Prison was quiet Sunday following a three-day rampage in which maximum security inmates erected barricades and vandalized their cells, a prison spokesman said.

Deputy Warden Ralph Pierce said no extra guards were on duty and a SWAT team called to move inmates out of the maximum-security section had been sent home.

"It's pretty quiet," Pierce said.

Pierce said problems apparently ended after 15 inmates were moved to another part of the prison. No injuries were reported during the disturbance, but Warden A.J. Arave has said damage to Unit Eight, the site of a brief riot last year, has been estimated at $4,000.

The vandalism started on Thursday and continued Saturday as inmates broke windows, damaged toilets, tore out security screens and electrical wiring, and destroyed light fixtures.

His mother said from the boy's hospital room in Salt Lake City Friday that Scott is "coming along fine."

In addition to suffering the loss of his right arm, she said, he sustained a broken left arm, and left leg and pelvic fractures.

"The doctors tell us that he will be here eight to nine weeks. Next week they will do some skin grafting over the area where the arm was replaced," his mother said. "It will probably be another nine months before he can move his fingers, and they (doctors) estimate two years before he will be able to use the arm to any extent."

"He's getting a lot of attention and right now he's watching television," his mother added. "He has had cards from his classmates at school and lots of calls from friends."

Mrs. Beasley said Scott will have to be in a wheelchair for a time after he leaves the hospital, because of the other fractures. He will also have to learn to use his left hand and arm for writing and other things.

"We feel pretty lucky that he's alive," she said, "and if the arm continues to grow back, that's an added benefit."

Mrs. Beasley said it took about an hour to get Scott out of the power unit on the tractor, as he was wrapped around it before his father, who was only 10 feet away, could shut off the tractor.

She said the father, grandfather and neighbors who came to the scene to assist, cut clothing away to release the boy. When officers and ambulance personnel arrived they helped cut the machinery apart to complete the rescue.

"He was conscious all the time," she said. "They say when something that severe happens there isn't a lot of pain for an hour or two. My husband and the others kept talking to him all the time, so he wouldn't go into shock."

The mother said her son's arm will probably be about two inches shorter than the other as a result of the injury and replacement, but she added that's a small price to pay for his life or a permanent loss of the arm.

Details were sketchy at the time of the accident.

tion. I think you're going to see some real progress made there."

Boyd also spoke of wanting to work toward making Idaho a more unified state, as opposed to the north-south fighting now.

"I don't know if I have a big agenda, but I do want to bring together all the factions," said Boyd, who was born in Filer and graduated from Twin Falls High School. "I think we've been fairly factionalized, and I don't think that's necessary."

As a legislator who now lives in Northern Idaho, Boyd said it is now time for his region to "put up or shut up."

"People in Northern Idaho often say, tongue in cheek, that nobody knows us, and nobody loves us, but now the burden is on our back to show people they made a good decision," he said. "I want to work in harmony, and try to make this all one state."

Boyd grew up on a farm near South Park in Twin Falls. His mother, Gladys Boyd, still lives in Twin Falls, and a brother lives in Hagerman.

He was graduated from the University of Idaho, where he met his wife, Beverly. He joined the U.S. Air Force at the end of the Korean War and served three years.

After his service, Boyd landed a job for Asgrow Seed Company as a field man in Northern Idaho. He also worked in sales for the company in New York for three years, before moving back to Northern Idaho to take over his wife's family farm.

Boyd said he gravitated into politics to keep his brain charged up.

"Farming is a humdrum life, and this was a way to keep my brain invigorated in the off months," he said.

He wanted the speaker's job for the same reason.

"I've been here for 10 years, serving on the Appropriations Committee, which is a good committee, but you don't move much," he said. "I thought I'd better keep climbing, or I was going to burn down."

" which amount to charges for using the land over time, Brown said. Generally, the fees extend back only a few years and are far less than the biggest to date, a $33,000 settlement for a large trespass. "We don't like to lean on anybody," he said.

Most farmers acknowledge past trespasses and pay the fees without being hauled into court. At the same time, few came forward in the late 60s when Congress offered amnesty. "Despite the fact that there was a three-year filing period, we (Shoshone District) had only 20 applications filed," Brown said.

Brown, state BLM officials and those from the Prineville District now are designing the nuts and bolts of the pilot program under orders from Washington. They are looking for new, streamlined approaches to reclaim the land.

Among the recommendations is likely to be a check of the district's borders. "We feel this year (ending Sept. 30, 1987), we're going to be able to put together a pretty sound inventory for this," he said.

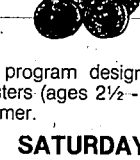

But enforcement may be another question. Both Idso and Chuck Häszler, former Shoshone District director and now deputy state BLM director for operations, said the agency has no new money to pump into enforcing farm or ranch trespasses.

It also has to worry about other trespasses, such as those involving grazing, timber, occupancy or timber.

"We'll have to do it with what we've got, and that's one of the challenges," Idso said.

Quitting legislator claims no grudges

'I feel like I was railroaded' — Bateman

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Linden Bateman, who resigned his seat in the Idaho House of Representatives on Friday after being passed over for chairmanship of the Resources and Conservation Committee, said he has no hard feelings against new House Speaker Tom Boyd of Genesee.

But Bateman, who dropped out of the Republican primary race for lieutenant governor last spring then decided to run again for his seat in the Legislature, said he's finished with Statehouse politics.

"I feel like I was railroaded," said Bateman, who left Boise abruptly after dropping off a handwritten letter of resignation at the governor's office. "But I still think Tom will be a good speaker. What he did was within his prerogative."

Bateman said the speaker's decision to offer him chairmanship of the House State Affairs Committee rather than Resources and Conservation added to his list of frustrations as a legislator.

"I've failed to reach too many goals in the last few years," he said. "This year, I felt it was going to be more of the same, and I thought there were better things to do with my life."

Bateman said he will continue teaching at Bonneville High School and stay active in community affairs. But politically, he said, "I plan to lead a pretty quiet life."

Before the committee assignments were made, Bateman said he was pleased with what he perceived as some positive changes in House leadership. He supported fellow District 32 Rep. John Sessions, R-Driggs, on the first ballot for the House speaker race, but had no complaints when Boyd, a long-time friend and political moderate, was the eventual winner.

"I thought I was offering him a plum," Boyd said of the State Affairs offer. "It certainly would have given eastern Idaho a major committee chairmanship."

Boyd said he had no particular reason for choosing Rep. Dean Haagenson of Coeur d'Alene as Resources and Conservation chairman over Bateman. But the speaker said Haagenson deserved some consideration for his avid support in Boyd's race for speaker against Sessions and Rep. Robert Geddes of Preston.

That's part of the political game," Boyd said. "I also think Dean will do a good job as committee chairman, but that's not to say Linden would not."

Bateman said although Boyd had a right to decide the chairmanships, seniority traditionally has been the deciding factor.

"A person who is up for the chairmanship of two committees usually gets his choice unless the speaker doesn't feel the person is qualified," he said. "That's not the case here, and they have admitted that I'm capable. State Affairs is a good committee, but I don't think I would be as effective there."

Bateman said he believes Haagenson will do well as chairman, "but I don't know if he will see things in southeast Idaho the way I would have."

At least five other Idaho Falls Republicans have indicated an interest in taking over Bateman's House seat, including Dane Watkins, who had served 15 years in the state Senate. Watkins was defeated last May in his bid for the 2nd District congressional nomination.

Also throwing their hats in the ring are Greg Crockett, who came within 100 votes of defeating Bateman in last May's primary; and Con Mahoney, the Bonneville County Republican Central Committee chairman who was defeated in the primary by Sen. John Hansen.

Mel Richardson, who was defeated in his bid to unseat Democratic 2nd District Rep. Richard Stallings, said he was interested in an appointment, but his decision will depend on the career route he takes. Dwight Johnson, who worked on Richardson's congressional campaign, said the former broadcast executive's decision would depend upon who else is running.

The District 32 Republican leaders must submit a list of three names to Gov. John Evans within 10 days. If the governor does not make an appointment within 15 days after the names are submitted, district GOP officials will designate one of the three nominees.

Bateman said he had no regrets about his decision to leave the Legislature, other than letting down the Republicans who supported his re-election.

"But someone will be appointed to take my place, and it sounds like there are some good people running," he said.

Reagan's popularity plummets following news of Iranian arms

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utahns' confidence in President Reagan's handling of foreign policy has plummeted since the Iran-Contras arms deal was revealed to the public, a poll indicates.

The survey published Sunday by The Salt Lake Tribune shows a remarkable turnaround for the president in staunchly Republican Utah, which gave him the highest pluralities of any state in the 1980 and 1984 elections.

Of 300 Salt Lake County residents surveyed, 50 percent said they disapproved or strongly disapproved of Reagan's handling of foreign policy. That compares to 42 percent who said they approved or strongly approved with 8 percent undecided.

In 1984, when Reagan won a record 75 percent of the Utah vote in his election to a second term, 63 percent of the respondents in a similar poll said they approved the president's foreign policy dealings.

Other results of the poll revealed a 50-50 split on whether or not Donald Regan should resign as chief of staff, but showed strong support for George Shultz staying on as secretary of state.

Republicans in the sample were loyal to the president, with 63 percent supporting his foreign policies, while a hefty majority of Democrats, 70 percent, and independents, 65 percent, were critical of his conduct.

On the question of resignations by Shultz and Regan, Republicans favored retention of both men. Democrats said Shultz should remain, but advised Regan to resign.

The results were based on telephone interviews with a cross-section of Salt Lake County adults. The poll, which was conducted by Bardsley & Haslacher, has a maximum error range of 5.8 percent.

Mormon leader's holiday message emphasizes Christ

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon Church President Ezra Taft Benson on Sunday told followers they can find eternal happiness if they pattern their lives after the example of Jesus Christ.

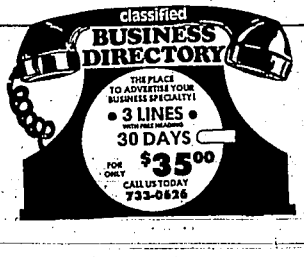

Benson, delivering his Christmas address in the historic Tabernacle on Temple Square, also said The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the only true church, and salvation lies in obedience to its precepts.

"There is no salvation or exaltation for us outside of the church. The church is the organized means which God uses to establish and expand his work. We must work with it and in it, build it up and move it forward," Benson said in remarks prepared for delivery.

Benson, 87, a former U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, is the 13th president of the 6.1 million-member church.

He said God's blessings are bestowed upon those who obey his laws, and the best method to obedience is to follow Christ.

"Some men are willing to die for their faith, but they are not willing to fully live for it," he said. "Christ both lived and died for us. By walking in his steps and through his atonement, we can gain the greatest gift of all, eternal life."

NOTICE OF EMERGENCY RULE-MAKING AND NOTICE OF INTENDED REGULAR RULE-MAKING

In compliance with Sections 67-5203(b) and 67-5204(b)(2), Idaho Code, notice is hereby given that the Department of Health and Welfare, State of Idaho, has undertaken emergency procedures for rule-making. The action, under Docket No. 0304-8610E, involves the amendment, adoption and repeal of rules governing Food Stamps, Title 3, Chapter 4, Rules and Regulations of the Department of Health and Welfare Regulations Nos. 3-4004.09; 3-4004.54; 3-4113.01(p); 3-4128.04, .05 and .06; 3-4150; 3-4231.05(d); 3-4245.06; 3-4246; 3-4251; 3-4263.07; 3-4263.10; 3-4274.01, .04 and .05; 3-4302.05; 3-4304.02(c); 3-4304.03(c); 3-4305.02 and 3-4900. The action has been taken under the authority granted in Sections 56-202(b) and 3-106(1), Idaho Code, for the purposes of implementing and interpreting the provisions of 7 CFR 272.1, 7 CFR 272.1, 7 CFR 273.2, 7 CFR 273.5, 7 CFR 273.7 and 7 CFR 273.9.

Emergency rule-making is necessary because failure to implement these provisions would result in a federal compliance issue. The eligibility of students attending institutions of post-secondary education and the categorical eligibility of Public Assistance (PA) and/or Supplemental Security Income (SSI) recipients for food coupons are already federal law under the Food Security Act of 1985. The deductions and allowance changes must be updated annually. A compliance issue would result in federal sanctions and subsequent losses to the state. These changes are required by federal regulation.

The rules, which, were adopted by emergency procedures on the 10th day of November, 1986, and filed by the undersigned on the 10th day of November, 1986, became effective on the 14th day of November, 1986, and will expire at the end of one hundred twenty (120) days on the 13th day of March, 1987.

In addition, notice is also given, in compliance with Section 67-5203(a)(1), Idaho Code, that the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, Division of Welfare, has also initiated regular rule-making under Docket No. 0304-8610 prior to adoption of these emergency rules as permanent rules.

The following is a descriptive summary of the substance of the emergency and intended permanent action and of the principal issues involved:

1. Households which contain only members who are recipients of PA or SSI benefits are categorically eligible for Food Stamp benefits as allowed in the Food Security Act of 1985 in Amendment No. 276 of the Federal Register published August 5, 1986.

2. The exclusion of educational loans on which payment is deferred, grants, scholarships, fellowships, veterans' educational benefits, and the like, if these benefits are used for tuition or mandatory fees, has been extended to institutions of post-secondary education and includes schools which do not require a high school diploma or equivalency but offer programs designed to lead to the employment and economic self-sufficiency of its students. This provision is allowed in the Food Security Act of 1985 in Amendement No. 277 of the Federal Register published August 22, 1986.

3. Origination fees and insurance payments placed on an educational loan are now excluded as income as allowed in the Food Security Act of 1985 in Amendment No. 277 of the Federal Register published August 22, 1986.

4. The definition of eligible students has been changed from disabled to "unfit" to avoid confusion and misinterpretation by the state agency. This amendment is in the Food Security Act of 1985 in Amendment No. 277 of the Federal Register published August 22, 1986.

5. SSI and Food Stamp joint processing procedures are repealed as allowed by the Food Security Act of 1985 in Amendment No. 275 of the Federal Register published June 9, 1986.

6. The thrifty food plan amounts, standard, shelter and dependent care deductions have been adjusted to reflect the federally mandated process of updating the allowances and deductions annually.

7. The interpretation of vendor payments has been amended to include warrants issued jointly to a participant and a person or organization providing a service to a participating household. This is in compliance with the Code of Federal Regulations at 7 CFR 273.9(c)(1).

Within the time limits specified below, any person can review the proposed rules in the DHW Administrative Procedure Section or in any of the regional administrative offices of the Department. Copies of the proposed rules will be made available upon written request specifying the docket number(s) cited above and at a rate of ten (10) cents per page. Checks must accompany the request and be made payable to the Department of Health and Welfare for the amount of $3.50.

Anyone can submit written comment regarding the proposed rules, and any individual or industry who may be affected by the proposed rules is encouraged to submit information concerning the anticipated economic impact of the proposed action. For assistance on technical questions concerning the proposed rules, contact Linda L. Caballero, Chief, Bureau of Income Maintenance, Department of Health and Welfare, Division of Welfare, (208) 334-5818, Boise, Idaho. All written comments and data concerning the proposed rules must be directed to the undersigned and must be postmarked or delivered on or before December 22, 1986.

Rule-making hearing(s) will be held if signed, written requests for a hearing are submitted personally or are addressed to the undersigned and postmarked on or before December 22, 1986, from twenty-five (25) or more interested persons, or from an association presenting a petition with signatures of not less than twenty-five (25) members of the organization, or from a governmental subdivision or agency. THE ACES®

BOBBY WOLFF

"It isn't important to come out on top; what matters is to be the one who comes out alive."

— Bertolt Brecht.

With a decent break in today's trumps, South scores an easy overtrick. What happens when the mathematical tables are on a short vacation? South loses an easy game.

South ruffed the third diamond and played the three top trumps. The combined chances of finding trumps 3-3 or of dropping the doubleton jack were fairly good, but not on this deal — West was left in control with the high trump.

In desperation, South crossed to dummy in clubs to try the heart finesse, and West took his king. West's spade jack drew South's last trump and two more diamond winners sent the game down a reeling three tricks.

South failed to spot a safety play in trumps that guards against any 4-2 break. After ruffing the third diamond, South should lead a trump toward dummy and finesse the 10. In today's layout, the finesse wins and South can now draw trumps and run the clubs for an overtrick.

If East had had the spade jack, the finesse would have lost, but South would have still been safe. Dummy's spade queen would remain on guard against a possible diamond lead, and no finesse would be needed had East shifted to hearts. In the latter case, South would win his ace and draw trumps, throwing dummy's queen under the ace. The club suit would then provide the remaining tricks.

Landry receives threats, leaves game

Dallas' playoff chances sliding away after pasting by Rams

By KEN PETERS
AP Sports Writer

NFC West

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Jim Everett, playing in just his fourth pro game, completed 14 of 25 passes for 212 yards and a touchdown Sunday night to lead the Los Angeles Rams to a 29-10 victory over the slumping Dallas Cowboys.

The game was marked by Dallas Coach Tom Landry's being escorted to the dressing room by security officers, who said they were taking the measure as a precaution after they had received telephone threats on Landry's life.

But, after remaining off the field for a brief time in the fourth quarter, Landry decided to return and was on the sidelines for the remainder of the game.

Landry, the only coach the team has had in 27 years, returned to the field wearing what appeared to be a protective vest underneath his sweater.

The Rams, 10-4, could clinch their second consecutive NFC West title with a victory over Miami next Sunday.

The Cowboys, losers of three straight and five of their last six, fell to 7-7 and saw their faint hopes for the playoffs grow even slimmer.

Everett helped stake the Rams to a 20-10 halftime lead, connecting on 10 of 18 throws for 182 yards, including a 22-yard touchdown pass to Henry Ellard.

The rookie quarterback out of Purdue also marched the Rams 82 yards in the closing moments of the first half in a drive that was capped by Mike Lansford's 27-yard field goal with eight seconds remaining.

The Rams took a 7-0 lead midway through the first quarter when cornerback LeRoy Irvin intercepted a pass by Steve Pelluer and ran 50 yards for a touchdown.

The Cowboys tied it later in the quarter on Timmy Newsome's 5-yard scoring run.

Lansford put Los Angeles up 10-7 with a 37-yard field goal early in the second quarter, then the Cowboys' Rafael Septien knotted the game again with a 48-yarder, his longest of the season.

Everett threw the scoring pass to Ellard 4:53 before halftime, then guided the Rams down to Lansford's field goal in the closing seconds of the half.

The Rams padded their lead to 22-10 in the third quarter, when defensive end Gary Jeter sacked Pelluer in the Cowboys' end zone. A 41-yard touchdown run by Barry Redden in the fourth quarter capped the Rams' scoring.

Eric Dickerson gained 106 yards on 28 carries to run his 1986 rushing total to 1,629 yards. While that keeps him far ahead in the league rushing derby this season, it leaves him 163 yards behind his 14-game total of 1,792 in 1984, when he set the NFL rushing mark of 2,105 yards.

Jets continue to nosedive

Offense shot down by 49ers' pass rush

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A strong pass rush, something the San Francisco 49ers sure could have used six days earlier, helped them overpower the New York Jets 24-10 Sunday.

The Jets ran the ball only 13 times, gaining 38 yards, and 49ers Coach Bill Walsh said, "They were throwing so heavily that, really, it was a pass-rush game."

San Francisco's offense got three touchdowns from its fullbacks, two by Roger Craig and one by rookie Tom Rathman, and the defensive unit never let up against New York quarterback Ken O'Brien.

O'Brien, the NFL's top-ranked passer, was sacked four times and, for the first time in his pro career, was intercepted three times.

"What happened the other night was on the back of everybody's mind, especially when we came out for the second half," admitted Michael Carter, the nose tackle who had one of the 49ers' sacks.

Last Monday night, the 49ers held a 17-0 halftime lead over the New York Giants but lost 21-17. Phil Simms of the Giants, facing virtually no defensive pressure, passed for 202 yards in a 21-point third quarter.

"It's to the 49ers' credit. They came back from that game and played well today," Jets Coach Joe Walton said.

His own team went down to a third straight defeat. The Jets scored their first touchdown in three weeks, but it came in the closing minutes, with the score 21-3, as O'Brien hit Freeman McNeil on a 10-yard pass.

"We have to stop talking about what we have to do and, instead, just do it. We've got to put the excuses aside," Jets center Joe Fields said.

Craig ran for San Francisco's first two touchdowns and Rathman, who took over at fullback after Craig suffered a mild concussion, dashed 29 yards for the third. They combined for 130 yards and the team had a season-high 198 yards rushing.

"We knew we had to come out swinging," Craig said. "A situation like this brings out the best in this team."

O'Brien had an 0-for-9 start on his passes and finished the day 20-of-44 for 198 yards. He has been intercepted seven times in the last three games.

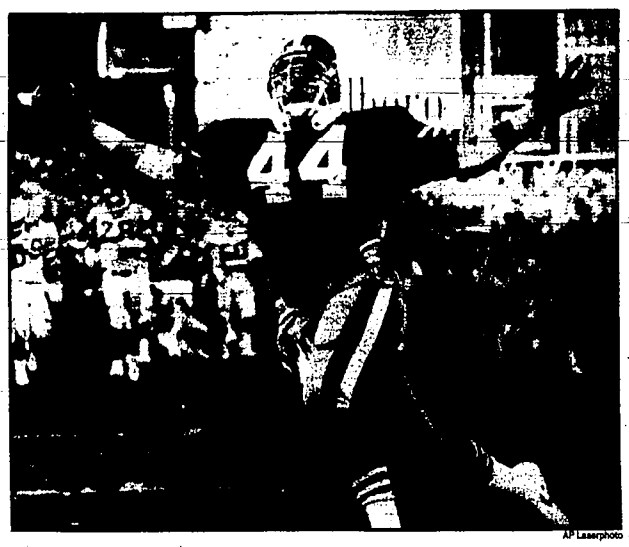

The 49ers, 8-5-1, are second in the NFC West. The Jets fell to 10-4 but remained tied with the New England Patriots, also a loser Sunday, for the AFC East lead.

The 49ers scored on a pair of second-period drives, with Craig running 1 and 5 yards for the TDs, and went 61 yards in the third quarter on a drive kept alive by a roughing-the-punter penalty against New York.

Rathman, like Craig a Nebraska product, scored his first pro touchdown on a draw play. It also was the 49ers' longest run from scrimmage this season.

Joe Montana's passes, including a 42-yard completion to wide receiver Jerry Rice and a 21-yarder to Russ Francis, helped set up the rushing TDs. Rice had scored six of the team's last seven offensive touchdowns before Sunday's shift to the ground.

The 49ers got their final points on Ray Wersching's 33-yard field goal in the last quarter.

Five interceptions key Kansas City rout of Broncos, 37-10

Veteran Chiefs defensive end Art Still, left, stops Denver fullback Gerald Willhite

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — By whipping the division-leading Denver Broncos 37-10 Sunday and intercepting four John Elway passes, the Kansas City Chiefs kept up a strange, four-year hex on the Broncos' strong-armed quarterback.

Since coming into the NFL as the No. 1 draft choice in 1983, Elway has quarterbacked four victories and three losses against Kansas City. But he's thrown only three touchdown passes while suffering 16 interceptions.

"For some reason, we play well against Denver," said safety Deron Cherry, who thwarted one thrust Sunday with an end zone interception.

"It's not a matter of how badly he's played, but how well we've played," said cornerback Albert Lewis. "He can kill you. But we just match up well against them in the secondary."

Todd Blackledge, in relief of injured Bill Kenney, threw two touchdown passes as the Chiefs snapped a three-game losing skid and improved their record to 8-6. Elway's backup, Gary Kubiak, threw an interception in the final minutes that Lloyd Burruss returned 72 yards for the final score as the Broncos dropped to 10-4 and left town still needing one victory for the AFC West title.

"I don't know what it is," Elway said when asked about his problems with Kansas City. He wound up hitting 23 of 42 passes for 246 yards, but suffered five sacks along with four interceptions.

"Hopefully, I'll be able to figure it out," Elway said. "We played well here last year, but one in four years is not good."

Tackle Pete Koch, who supplied much of the pass rush Sunday, said Elway's frustrations against Kansas City may lie in the nature of athletic competition.

"Statistics can be very misleading," Koch said. "Elway is one of the NFL's best. But I don't think there's an athlete in this league who doesn't have a team he tends to excel against and a team he tens to have a lot of trouble with."

Blackledge, benched for ineffectiveness seven weeks earlier, got the start because of an injury to Bill Kenney. He threw a 9-yard scoring pass to Stephone Paige in the second quarter and hit Jeff Smith with a 17-yard touchdown pass in the third. Boyce Green, following Gary Spani's interception in the fourth period, scored on a 1-yard plunge that put the Chiefs ahead 24-10 with 12:56 remaining in the game.

Nick Lowery kicked a 30-yard field goal in the first period and tacked on a 45-yarder in the fourth after Scott Radecic hauled in the fourth interception. Lowery's third field goal carried 44 yards with 2:58 left in the game.

Sherman Cocroft's interception in the second quarter gave the Chiefs the ball on the Broncos 17 and, moments later, Paige snared Blackledge's pass for a 10-3 lead. Elway's 2-yard touchdown pass to Sammy Winder made it 10-10 in the final seconds of the first half.

Then the Chiefs went up 17-10 when Smith beat Randy Robbins for the touchdown pass in the back of the end zone.

The Broncos, who beat the Chiefs 38-17 in Denver three weeks earlier, could win the AFC West title Monday night if Seattle beats the Los Angeles Raiders.

The Broncos were in trouble on their first possession when Jim Colbert's punt sailed 56 yards to the 2-yard line. Moments later, Jeff Smith returned a Denver punt nine yards to put the Chiefs at the Broncos' 35.

Blackledge immediately hit Paige for 17 yards to the 13, but the drive stalled and Lowery came on to kick a 30-yard field goal.

Rich Karlis, who later missed field goals of 47 and 42 yards, drew Denver even at 3-3 with a 26-yard field goal following an embarrassing turnover by Blackledge. The fourth-year quarterback faded back to pass on third-and-3 from the Broncos' 19 but had the ball slip out of his hand. The ball skittered away and was finally controlled by Denver's Tony Colorito on the Broncos' 45. The play was ruled a team sack and a fumble.

Elway scrambled 24 yards on a first-down play to the Chiefs' 14 but had to settle for only three points.

Elway hooked up with Mark Jackson on a 51-yard pass play early in the second quarter to the Chiefs' 23. But Deron Cherry intercepted Elway's next pass in the end zone, marking the fourth straight year the all-pro safety has made seven interceptions.

Giants take it to 'Skins

NFC East

WASHINGTON (AP) — The New York Giants defense, befuddled by Jay Schroeder the first time they met him and fatigued trying to chase him the second, finally came to terms with the young Washington quarterback.

With the defense intercepting Schroeder six times and sacking him four, the Giants beat the Washington Redskins 24-14 in the NFC East showdown game Sunday for their seventh straight win and their 12th in 14 games this season. One more win or another Washington loss in the final two games and New York will win the NFC East, their first title of any kind in 23 years.

And despite Phil Simms' 265 yards and three touchdown passes, it was the defense that did it. That defense was shredded by Schroeder after he replaced an injured Joe Theismann last season and again this year in the first game, despite New York's victory.

"The first time we played against him, we knew nothing about him, and the second time we got tired chasing him out of the pocket," said linebacker Harry Carson, whose third-quarter interception set up the 16-yard TD pass from Simms to Phil McConkey that gave New York a 24-7 lead and effectively iced the game.

"This time we put pressure on him and flushed him out. I think we had him confused."

The pressure, in fact, seemed to be the key. Not only were there four sacks, — three by Lawrence Taylor to regain the NFL lead from Dexter Manley with 19½ — but Schroeder was harrassed constantly, particularly by Leonard Marshall, who chased him from sideline to sideline.

Simms, meanwhile, took advantage of a defense concentrating on Joe Morris, who ran 22 times for 62 yards, to open up the game. In addition to the third-quarter TD pass to McConkey, he had second-quarter touchdowns of nine yards to Mark Bavaro and seven yards to Bobby Johnson.

"When teams go out and try to stop Joe Morris, Phil Simms is going to have a good game," said Morris, who had just 14 yards last Monday while Simms was throwing for 388 yards in a 21-17 come-from-behind win over San Francisco.

The Redskins' only weapon was Kelvin Bryant, who caught 13 passes for 130 yards, most of them on short dumps over the middle from Schroeder.

Colts get first win at Falcons' expense

AFC East

ATLANTA (AP) — It took a second chance to prove it, but Tate Randle of the Indianapolis Colts discovered Sunday that "miracles do happen."

Randle blocked a Rick Donnelly punt that Eugene Daniel scooped up and returned 13 yards for a touchdown with 20 seconds remaining as the Colts snapped a 13-game losing streak with a 28-23 victory over the Atlanta Falcons Sunday.

Randle had been called for roughing the punter on the previous play, but the penalty was offset when Atlanta's Aaron Brown was charged with a personal foul, forcing a replay of the down.

"After the first one, I was looking for a hole to crawl in," Randle said. "Luckily we got a second chance."

The victory prevented the Colts from tying an NFL record for most consecutive losses at the start of a season and gave Ron Meyer a victory in his coaching debut at Indianapolis.

Meyer, hired to replace the fired Rod Dowhower on Monday, said, "I'm glad the players finally had the experience of good things happening to them. It was great to win on the road after 13 straight gashes in the teeth."

The Falcons, in a furious final 20 seconds, reached the Indianapolis 12 before time ran out when Arthur Cox couldn't hold onto Turk Schonert's pass just outside the Colts' 1.

"It's the greatest play I ever made," Randle said. "Going 0-13, any other team would have folded their tents with 30 seconds left and down 23-21."

"I can't compare it to anything," Daniel said of his game-winning score. "I now realize the game is not over till the final second. That's what happened.

"Everything's changed now," Daniel said. "We've got a new coach and we've got a victory."

"I'm happy they carried me along for the ride," Meyer said. "It stopped a heck of a slide."

Cincinnati bombs N.E.

AFC Central

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Boomer Esiason threw for 284 yards and James Brooks and Stanley Wilson ran for more than 100 yards each in Cincinnati's record-breaking offensive performance Sunday.

But replay official Joe Gardi, who negated an apparent Bengals' touchdown, lit the fuse on their 31-7 victory over the New England Patriots.

Gardi ruled that Tony Collins was down when the ball popped loose in the third quarter and Cincinnati's Robert Jackson returned it 63 yards into the end zone. On the next two plays, Tony Eason threw a 39-yard completion to Stanley Morgan and Collins dove over the goal line from a yard out to cut the Bengals' lead to 10-7 with 3:28 left in the period.

Cincinnati Coach Sam Wyche then gathered his players around him on the sidelines.

"I told the guys we had to give it our best shot," he said. "We went right down the field and scored."

It was a cooler reaction than he had a week earlier when an inadvertent whistle deprived Cincinnati of an apparent touchdown in a 34-28 loss to Denver. After the game, he kicked a door and had a run-in with a reporter.

This time, Esiason said, "He told us to keep our poise. He said, 'We're going against the odds. We're not only going against the New England Patriots, we have the officials against us.' He told us 'now is the time to come together.'"

Cincinnati went on to set club records of 584 total yards and 300 rushing yards; 163 on Brooks' runs. The Bengals' young defense shut down the NFL's highest scoring team as they denied the Patriots a chance to clinch a playoff berth.

Cincinnati, 9-5, stayed in the thick of the battle for an AFC post-season spot. New England, 10-4, lost its bid for a team record eighth consecutive victory.

"It's very simple," New England Coach Raymond Berry said. "We got it handed to us pretty good today."

"It was definitely surprising," Patriots' cornerback Raymond Clayborn said. "This is the worst defensive performance we've had since Miami a few years ago."

It was their worst defensive performance ever, breaking the mark of 552 yards gained by the Dolphins on Oct. 21, 1984, as they couldn't handle Cincinnati's balanced attack.

"We had them in a situation where they didn't know what to do," Brooks said.

Cooper notches second in saddle bronc go-round at NFR

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Kent Cooper of Albion finished second in the fourth go-round of the saddle bronc riding competition here Sunday at the National Finals Rodeo.

Tom Reeves of Eagle Butte, S.D., won the fourth go with a score of 78, while Cooper registered a 77. Cooper, who came into the NFR ranked fifth on the money earnings list, won the second round Saturday afternoon.

Rick Smith of Laramie, Wyo., the leading money winner in the bronc riding competition through the first two rounds of the NFR, had to be carried from the arena on a stretcher after he was thrown from his horse, landing on his head. Officials said he was not seriously injured.

Skeeter Thurson of Hyanis, Neb., who won the Saturday night session in saddle bronc riding with an 82, took over the leadership of the event after four rounds.

Utah cowboy Lewis Feild maintained the lead in his quest for a second straight title as all-around cowboy in the fourth go.

Feild, 30, of Elk Ridge, Utah, tied for second place in the bearback riding competition to stay on top among 115 cowboys competing for a record $1.9 million in the finals, dubbed the "Super Bowl of Rodeo."

Charles Sampson, 29, of Los Angeles, maintained his lead in the bull riding competition, tying for first place in a ride that brought the crowd at the Thomas and Mack Arena to its feet.

Sampson, who learned bull riding in the Watts section of Los Angeles, has won more than $20,000 since the finals began Friday night, placing in each of the first four rounds.

The rodeo runs through Saturday.

Feild advanced his NFR to nearly $11,000 and his winnings for the year to more than $130,000 with Sunday's second-place tie.

Feild won the title of all-around cowboy in 1985 and entered this year's finals as the man to beat for the title.

Robin Burwash of Airdrie, Alberta, Canada, finished first in the bearback riding event. Tying with Feild were Chuck Logue, McKinney, Tex.; C.R. Kemple, Durango, Colo.; and Jeff Hart, Laporte, Colo.

Tying with Sampson in the bull riding was Cody Snyder of Redcliff, Alberta, Canada, followed by Phillip Fournier of Bowie, Tex., and Tuff Hedeman of Gainesville, Tex.

Butch Myers of Welda, Kansas, won first place in the steer wrestling. Finishing in a four-way tie for second were Byron Walker, Ennis, Tex.; John Jones, Morro Bay, Calif.; Gary Green, Lewisville, Tex.; and Roy Duvall, Checotah, Okla.

Rusty Wright of Mount Pleasant, Texas, and Rick Stock of Sho Low, Ariz., won first place in team roping. Doyle Gellerman of Oakdale, Calif., and Leo Camarillo of Lockeford, Calif., tied for second with Bobby Hurley of Clarksville, Ark., and Dennis Watkins of Taft, Calif.

Paul Tierney of Rapid City, S.D., won Sunday's calf roping competition, followed by Jerry Jetton of Stephenville, Tex., and Cliff Williamson of Madden, Alberta, Canada.

In the women's barrel racing, Deb Mohon of Gladewater, Tex., took first place, edging out Janet Powell of Athens, Tex. Charmayne James, Clayton, N.M., won has won $113,000 for the year in barrel racing competition, finished third in the event.

On Saturday night, Feild failed, however, to place in the other bareback competition and was thrown off the horse in his two tries at saddle bronc riding.

Jimmie Cooper of Monument, N.M., who moved into second place in the all-around chase with a win in calf roping in Friday's opening session, strengthened his grip on the position with a tie for second in team roping in Saturday night's third go with teammate Allen Bach of Chandler, Ariz.

He failed to place in calf roping, his other speciality.

In the bull riding Saturday night, rookie-of-the-year Jim Sharp of Kermit Texas, captured first place with a score of 83. Sampson was second at 81, while Chuck Simonson of Epping, N.D., was third at 79 points.

Suzanne Fausett of Duschesne, Utah, scored an upset in the barrel racing in the third go, finishing in 13.75 seconds to edge out Janet Powell of Athens, Texas, who was clocked in 13.85. Fausett, who had earnings of only $23,612 going into the finals, picked up top money of $5,280.

Also Saturday, Todd Fox of Marble Falls, Texas, captured first with a 3.5 second time. Lyman tied for second with Paul Hughes of Kim, Colo.

In team roping, Tee Woolman of Llanos, Texas, and Bob Harris of Gillette, Wyo., moved into first place overall by winning both the afternoon and evening sessions.

Series MVP heads list of free agents

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Baseball

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. — World Series hero Ray Knight and 300-game winner Tom Seaver led the list Sunday of free agents who probably will not be back with their teams next season.

Teams had until midnight to either re-sign their own free agents or offer them the option of salary arbitration. If clubs did neither, they lost the right to re-sign them until May 1.

Former Cy Young winner John Denny of Cincinnati, former World Series MVP Rick Dempsey of Baltimore, Dave Kingman of Oakland, Gary Ward of Texas and Lonnie Smith of Kansas City were among other free agents cut loose by their 1986 teams Sunday.

Knight and the Mets were unable to work out a deal in the last hours before the deadline.

"We talked a number of times to his agent today and we just couldn't come together on a figure," Mets General Manager Frank Cashen said.

Knight hit .298 with 76 runs batted in during the regular season and then sparkled in the seven-game Series triumph over Boston, batting .391 with five RBI.

"They made their position clear," said Knight's agent, George Kalafis. "Of course he's disappointed."

"But this was a matter of principal, and Ray is a man of principal."

Knight had originally sought a two-year contract worth $2.1 million, but softened that as the deadline approached to a one-year pact for about $1 million. The Mets had maintained their offer of a one-year contract worth about $800,000.

Seaver, 42, went a combined 7-13 for the Chicago White Sox and Boston Red Sox. He made $1.132 million last season, and had asked for an $800,000 contract from the Red Sox for 1987. Boston had offered $600,000.

"We would've liked to sign him, but we did not," Boston General Manager Lou Gorman said.

Seaver missed the American League playoffs and the World Series with a strained knee, and there has been speculation that the injury could finish his career.

Oakland announced it would not offer salary arbitration to Kingman, perhaps clearing the way for Reggie Jackson — who was unsigned by California — to take over as the A's designated hitter.

The Angels and New York Yankees took precautions to retain their free agents Sunday by offering salary arbitration to several key players. The Yankees made the offer to co-captains Ron Guidry and Willie Randolph and the Angels did the same with free agents Doug DeCinces, Bob Boone and Brian Downing.

"We don't want to go to arbitration," Yankees General Manager Woody Woodward said in announcing the team had offered it to Guidry, Randolph, Claudell Washington, Tommy John and Gary Roenicke.

"But we felt there was enough of a chance to settle, particularly the Guidry and Randolph contracts," he said. "We needed to buy that extra time. We felt there was enough done not to close it out at midnight."

Woodward said the Yankees would not offer arbitration to pitcher Britt Burns, who missed the entire 1986 season with injuries, or reserve infielder Mike Fischlin.

Mike Port, general manager of the American League West champion California, said the Angels offered arbitration to DeCinces, Boone and Downing because "it extends our rights and privileges to continue to reach a settlement."

"Prepatory work has already been done regarding signing our free agents," Port said.

Free agents have until Dec. 19 to accept or reject arbitration. If they refuse, their teams must sign them by Jan. 8 or lose that right until May 1.

Among the free agents who signed one-year contracts Sunday were Rudy Law and Jamie Quirk with Kansas City, Tom Hume of Philadelphia and Larry Herndon of Detroit.

Coach sets record as L.A. Lakers roll

NBA roundup

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Byron Scott scored 20 of his 26 points in the third quarter Sunday night to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to a 132-100 NBA victory over the Golden State Warriors and enable Pat Riley to achieve 300 career victories faster than any coach in NBA history.

Riley, a former Lakers guard who succeeded Paul Westhead as the team's head coach in November 1981, needed 416 games to become the 27th NBA coach to win 300 games.

Riley, the NBA's all-time leader in winning percentage, broke the record held by Billy Cunningham, who needed 430 games to win 300. Cunningham and Riley share the record for the fastest to reach 200 NBA victories.

Behind Scott, the Lakers outscored the Warriors 42-16 in the third quarter to open a 107-70 lead entering the final period. The Lakers went on a 27-4 spurt in a span of 7½ minutes to take a 92-58 cushion with 4:24 left in the period.

Scott scored the last eight points of the quarter, including a driving layin at the buzzer.

Portland 107, New York 104

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Clyde Drexler and Kiki Vandeweghe hit key baskets in the final minutes Sunday night as the Portland Trail Blazers edged the New York Knicks 107-104 in overtime for their fourth straight NBA victory.

The Knicks appeared headed for their second victory in three games under new Coach Bob Hill.

But, with New York leading 93-92 with 16 seconds left in regulation, the Knicks' Gerald Wilkins missed two free throws.

Drexler, who led all scorers with 26 points, sank an 18-footer and was fouled with eight seconds to play.

Dolphins' defense gets tough...

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — For a change, the NFL's most productive offense had to stand tensely on the sidelines and watch one of the league's most generous defenses win the football game.

The Miami Dolphins scored 31 first-half points, with Dan Marino throwing three touchdown passes in the first 30 minutes of Sunday's game, then had to stage a goal-line stand in the final 1:15 against the New Orleans Saints to win 31-27.

"Our young defense finally stopped them when they had to," Miami Coach Don Shula said.

The Dolphins started three rookies on a defensive unit that had given up 4,762 yards going into Sunday's game.

It came down to, "We gotta stop them. It's the ball game," said Dolphins linebacker Bob Brudzinski, whose 10-year tenure extends back into the glory years of Miami football.

"We didn't play too hot the whole game, giving up 257 yards rushing," he said. "But we came up and stopped them when we had to."

The Saints scored 17 points in the second half and had a touchdown called back on a penalty with 1:11 left in the game.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Dan Fouts became the third quarterback in NFL history to pass for 40,000 yards in his career and the San Diego Chargers recorded their first shutout in six years in a 27-0 victory Sunday over the Oilers.

AFC West

The 14-year veteran went past the 40,000-yard mark with a 22-yard completion to Trumaine Johnson late in the third period and left the game after the Chargers' final score midway through the final period.

Fouts completed 21 of 30 passes for 250 yards and a touchdown Sunday to run his yardage total to 40,050. Fran Tarkenton is the all-time passing yardage leader with 47,003 and John Unitas is second with 40,239.

San Diego running back Gary Anderson, who earlier was at the receiving end of a scoring pass from Fouts, also threw a touchdown pass to close out the scoring with a flourish. He threw a 4-yard scoring pass to tight end Kellen Winslow on a halfback option with 8:25 left to play.

The Chargers' final scoring drive was set up when Houston quarterback Oliver Luck was intercepted a second time.

Flutie, Tomczak lead Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Doug Flutie and Mike Tomczak are in a battle for the Chicago Bears' No. 1 quarterback job and that's exactly the way Coach Mike Ditka had it planned.

"I planned it and I knew exactly what I was going to do," Ditka said Sunday after the Bears buried Tampa Bay 48-14.

Ditka gave Flutie his first big chance in the second quarter and the 1984 Heisman Trophy winner from Boston College directed the Bears to three quick touchdowns. Flutie handed off to Thomas Sanders for a 9-yard touchdown, ran four yards for a score and passed for 27 yards to Walter Payton for another score.

Prior to the pass to Payton, Flutie completed his first NFL pass, a 52-yard strike to Willie Gault.

"I completed only two passes but it felt good to go out there and be successful," said Flutie, who had five incompletions.

"Doug did all right and so did Mike," said Ditka. "Everything worked out well. We had two quarterbacks and each of them ran for a touchdown and passed for a touchdown."

Tomczak ran for a touchdown in the first quarter and passed eight yards to Gault for another touchdown when he returned in the third quarter.

"I haven't lost a game that I have started yet," said Tomczak, who is 6-0 in starts while filling in for the injured Jim McMahon, who is out for the season.

Minnesota 32
Green Bay 6

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Minnesota Vikings Coach Jerry Burns can sympathize with Green Bay Packers Coach Forrest Gregg.

But not enough to give Back Minnesota's 32-6 victory Sunday, when the Vikings, 8-6, capitalized on two punting miscues to send the Packers to their first winless season at Lambeau Field since the stadium opened in 1957. Green Bay, 3-11 with two road games remaining, was 0-5 at the storied stadium this season.

"It was the same situation we had against Cleveland, when we had to go with (backup quarterback) Wade Wilson as punter" because an injury kept Greg Coleman out of an Oct. 26 loss to the Browns, Burns said. "So I can sympathize with Forrest. But I'll take 'em any way I can get 'em."

Darrin Nelson's 12-yard touchdown run and Tommy Kramer's 7-yard scoring pass to Anthony Carter came within a 1:14 span of the first quarter. Both scores occurred immediately after Green Bay problems involving substitute punter Bill Renner.

Midway through the opening quarter, after Al Del Greco's 39-yard field goal had given the Packers a 3-0 lead, Renner's first career punt was blocked by Ike Holt and recovered by Rufus Bess at the Green Bay 12.

On the next play, Nelson broke Tiger Greene's tackle at the 10, sidestepped Ken Stills at the 5 and scored to give Minnesota a 6-3 lead 9:29 into the game. Chuck Nelson's conversion attempt hit the left upright.

Monday Night match-up

Seahawks, Raiders battle for hope

SEATTLE (AP) — In the NFL's 14th week, the seasons of the Los Angeles Raiders and the Seattle Seahawks have been reduced to hope.

And on Monday night in the Kingdome, the Raiders and the Seahawks will be trying to keep those separate, flickering playoff hopes alive.

"We're still in the hunt," Raiders Coach Tom Flores said. "We have a chance, we have to approach it that way. Seattle still has a chance. We're faced with the same situation."

"Both teams are fighting for their lives," Seattle Coach Chuck Knox said. "We just have to find a way to win."

The Raiders, 8-5, have been installed as three-point favorites over the Seahawks, 7-6, in the nationally televised game at 7 p.m. on KIVI.

But the Seahawks have won two games in a row, including an impressive 31-14 Thanksgiving Day triumph in Dallas, while the Raiders are coming off a disappointing 33-27 overtime loss in Los Angeles. The Seahawks have won four in a row over the Raiders in the Kingdome.

Both Flores and Knox are hoping for an AFC wild-card berth.

"Any time you've got something to hang on to, you can still hope," Seahawks quarterback Dave Krieg said. "But we know we've got to take care of what we've got to do. If we don't beat the Raiders, it doesn't mean anything."

The Raiders grabbed a 14-0 lead against the Seahawks in Los Angeles on Oct. 12 in the first meeting between the division rivals. Los Angeles held on for a 14-10 victory.

Raiders quarterback Jim Plunkett, who celebrated his 39th birthday Friday, had a pair of touchdown passes in that game. He also scrambled three times for 19 yards, including two on key third-down plays.

"Nobody throws deep like the Raiders throw deep," Seattle free safety Eugene Robinson said. "We have to be conscious of that on every play — every play."

Los Angeles and Seattle have had contrasting seasons. After losing their first three games, the Raiders have won eight of their last 10 starts. The Seahawks won their first three and five of their first seven before dropping four in a row, the longest losing streak in Knox's four seasons in Seattle.

Seattle's main problem this season has been its offense — or rather its lack of offense. But Krieg and the Seahawks' offense finally came to life in Dallas with Krieg and Curt Warner having outstanding games.

Krieg completed 16 of 23 passes for 214 yards and two touchdowns while Warner, the AFC's leading rusher, ran for 122 yards and a touchdown on 22 carries.

"To go that distance and do what they did to a fairly high-powered offense (Dallas) is fairly impressive," Raiders tight end Todd Christensen said.

But the Raiders have the league's No. 2 defense and Krieg is worried.

"I don't know if you can ever whip their defense," he said. "We have to stay in there against them. They force you to make pinpoint passes with a lot of pressure in your face."

Browns befuddle Bills, 21-17

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Postseason play may be on the minds of Cleveland Browns fans, but the Browns themselves see the playoffs coming a little sooner than that.

AFC Central

The Browns, who defeated the Buffalo Bills 21-17 Sunday at rainy Rich Stadium, face a do-or-die situation next Sunday when they play Cincinnati in an AFC Central showdown. If they beat the Bengals, Cleveland is insured a playoff berth.

"Cincinnati's not just going to hand us this division," said Cleveland quarterback Bernie Kosar, who threw an 11-yard touchdown pass to Brian Brennan. "We're going to have to fight for it."

Added cornerback Hanford Dixon: "It's going to be a war."

That wasn't exactly the case against the Bills, who struggled throughout the game from deep in their own territory and lost despite quarterback Jim Kelly's two-touchdown, 315-yard passing day.

"What hurt us the most was our terrible field position we had at times during the game," Bills Coach Marv Levy said. "That had a lot to do with the problems we had today."

Pittsburgh 27
Detroit 17

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Louis Lipps, only a week after being knocked out by a forearm blow landed by Chicago Bears' linebacker Otis Wilson, delivered a 1-2 knockout punch to the Detroit Lions.

A two-time Pro Bowler who has been injured much of the season, Lipps caught two touchdown passes and his 48-yard reception set up a third Pittsburgh score as the Steelers rallied to beat the Lions 27-17 Sunday.

Lipps, who had only one previous TD catch this season, caught a 12-yard first-half scoring pass in the front right corner of the end zone before his spectacular 39-yard grab of a Mark Malone pass gave the Steelers the lead for good at 24-17.

NFC Central: St. Louis, Eagles tie

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Neither the St. Louis Cardinals nor the Philadelphia Eagles got a kick out of their 10-10 NFL tie Sunday.

The Cardinals' Eric Schubert missed three field goals, two in overtime, the last with five seconds left.

Philadelphia's Paul McFadden missed two, one in the extra period.

Schubert, a former school teacher who kicked last year for the New York Giants, is three for seven since joining the Cardinals Nov. 16. He replaced the injured John Lee.

"I really don't know what to say," Schubert said. "It is really hard to tell until we look at the films."

Schubert missed his first field goal, a 31-yarder, with 4:39 left in the third quarter and the score tied 3-3.

"It was a high snap," Schubert said.

He had a 40-yarder blocked by Eagles defensive end Reggie White 4:05 into overtime.

"The snap was low," Schubert said.

Lendl, Becker to meet in final

NEW YORK (AP) — Putting their power games on display, top-seeded Ivan Lendl and No. 2 Boris Becker blasted their way Sunday night into the championship match of the $500,000 Masters tennis tournament.

Becker, who has been challenging Lendl as the world's No. 1 player, stopped Sweden's Stefan Edberg 6-4, 6-4 after Lendl ousted another Swede, third-seeded Mats Wilander, 6-4, 6-2.

Lendl, the Czechoslovakian right-hander who won the French Open and the U.S. Open, will meet Becker, the 19-year-old Wimbledon winner, Monday night to decide this season-ending tournament title. Monday's winner will colect $100,000.

Duo misses record by stroke

LARGO, Fla. (AP) — Juli Inkster and Tom Purtzer, winners of the $650,000 J.C. Penney Classic, got everything they wanted out of the mixed team golf tournament except the record score they stalked for 72 holes.

Purtzer rolled a short putt for par past the cup on the 18th green at Bardmoor Country Club Sunday as he and Inkster closed out a wire-to-wire victory but narrowly missed equaling the 72-hole record of 24-under-par 264 set by Jan Stephenson and Fred Couples in 1983.

Inkster-Purtzer finished with a 69 for a four-day total of 23-under-par 265. Val Skinner and Mike Hulbert finished two shots back.

South African takes Challenge

SUN CITY, South Africa (AP) — Mark McNulty of South Africa won the $300,000 first prize in the Sun City Million Dollar Golf Challenge by three strokes over American Lanny Wadkins Sunday.

McNulty birdied the first two holes of the final round en route to a 4-under-par 68. He finished with a 6-under-par 262.

McNulty, who began the day two shots behind Britain's Howard Clark and Bernhard Langer of West Germany, closed the deficit with his early birdies and soon found himself in front as his rivals began to struggle.

Wadkins, the only American in the nine-man field, also passed the overnight leaders to earn the $150,000 second prize, shooting 70 for a 285 total.

America's Cup places change

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — The America's Cup challenger standings, already as crowded at the top as a New Hampshire primary, got more tightly packed Sunday.

Victories jumped America II one rung to fourth and Stars & Stripes one notch to second. Defeats dropped Britain's White Crusader from fourth into a tie for 10th with USA, a winner, and French Kiss from second to third.

The Frenchmen nosed ahead at the start by two seconds against New Zealand, but trailed by better than one minute at all marks. A broken running back stay on the eighth and final leg dropped her 4:43 behind at the finish.

The Kiwis, now 27-1 after winning for their 18th straight race, lead the fleet with 126 points.

Dennis Conner and Stars & Stripes have 94 points, Marc Pajot and French Kiss 93 and John Kolius and America II 80 in the race for the four semifinal berths.

Kenyan captures cool race

HONOLULU (AP) — Ibrahim Huessein took advantage of unusually cool weather to break his own year-old record in winning the 14th annual Honolulu Marathon Sunday.

The 28-year-old Kenyan, who now lives in Albuquerque, N.M., took an early lead and never was headed as he finished in 2 hours, 11 minutes, 44 seconds — 24 seconds better than his 1985 victory margin.

Carla Buerskens of the Netherlands also successfully defended her title in record time. She finished in 2:31:02, slicing 2 minutes and 22 seconds off Patti Lyons-Catalano's 1981 record.

Michigan handles Hawaii

HONOLULU (AP) — Bob Perryman rushed for 107 yards and scored two fourth-quarter touchdowns as fourth-ranked and Rose Bowl-bound Michigan defeated Hawaii, 27-10, Saturday.

Michigan took the lead for good on Perryman's first touchdown, a 2-yard dive with 14:17 left in the game to make the score 17-10.

Late Saturday college football

After Hawaii punted on its next possession, Michigan failed to make a first down. But Monte Robbins let loose a school-record 82-yard punt that put the Rainbows at their own 1-yard line.

When Hawaii failed to make a first down, Kyle Ahloo's punt gave Michigan the ball at its own 45.

On first down, Perryman ran left for 55 yards and his second touchdown at the 9:38 mark, giving Michigan a 24-10 lead.

Michigan, 11-1, closed out the scoring with a 27-yard field goal by Mike Gillette.

On Michigan's first possession of the second half, the Wolverines took a 10-3 lead when Jim Harbaugh scored on a 4-yard run with 10:15 left in the third quarter. Harbaugh ran for 16 yards twice on the nine-play, 66-yard drive.

Hawaii tied the game, 10-10, when Coyle Permetter dived in from 1-yard out with 5:24 left in the third quarter. The score ended a 14-play, 86-yard drive that featured 7 of 9 passing by quarterback Gregg Tipton.

Neither team found the end zone in a first half that ended in a 3-3 tie.

Michigan opened the scoring with a 40-yard field goal by Gillette on the Wolverines' first possession. It came at the 8:40 mark of the first quarter.

The score was set up by a fumble by Hawaii receiver David Dyas that was recovered by Michigan's Tony Gant at the Rainbow 48, and a 15-yard pass from Harbaugh to Greg McMurtry.
